by seducing the latter from their fidelity. See the preceding quotation.

Verse 15. Suddenly shall he be broken] Probably alluding to some punishment of the adulterer, such as being stoned to death. A multitude shall join together, and so overwhelm him with stones, that he shall have his flesh and bones broken to pieces ; and there shall be no remedy—none to deliver or pity him.

Verse 16. These six—doth the Lord hate] 1. A proud look—exalted eyes ; those who will not condescend to look on the rest of mankind. 2. A lying tongue— he who neither loves nor tells truth. 3. Hands that shed innocent blood, whether by murder or by battery.
4. A heart that deviseth wicked imaginations—the heart that fabricates such, lays the foundation, builds upon it, and completes the superstructure of iniquity.
5. Feet that be swift in running to mischief—he who works iniquity with greediness. 6. A false witness that speaketh lies—one who, even on his oath before a court of justice, tells any thing but the truth.

Seven are an abomination unto him] נפשו naphsha, “to his soul.” The seventh is, he that soweth dis- cord among brethren—he who troubles the peace of a family, of a village, of the state ; all who, by lies and misrepresentations, strive to make men's minds evil-affected towards their brethren.

Verse 20. Keep thy father's commandment] See on chap. i. 8.

Verse 21. Bind them continually upon thine heart] See on chap. iii. 3. And see a similar command, to which this is an allusion, Deut. vi. 6–8.

Verse 22. When thou goest, it shall lead thee] Here the law is personified ; and is represented as a nurse, teacher, and guardian, by night and day. An upright man never goes but as directed by God's word, and led by God's Spirit.

When thou sleepest] He commend's his body and soul to the protection of his Maker when he lies down ; and sleeps in peace. And when he awakes in the morning, the promises and mercies of God are the first things that present themselves to his recollection.

Verse 23. For the commandment is a lamp] It illuminates our path. It shows us how we should walk and praise God.

And the law is light] A general light, showing the na- ture and will of God, and the interest and duty of MAN.

And reproofs of instruction] Or, that instruction which reproves us for our sins and errors leads us into the way of life.

Verse 24. To keep thee from the evil woman] Solomon had suffered sorely from this quarter ; and hence his repeated cautions and warnings to others. The strange woman always means one that is not a man's own ; and sometimes it may also imply a foreign har- lot, one who is also a stranger to the God of Israel.

Verse 25. Neither let her take thee with her eye- lids.] It is a very general custom in the East to paint the eye-lids. I have many Asiatic drawings in which this is expressed. They have a method of polishing the eyes with a preparation of antimony, so that they appear with an indescribable lustre ; or, as one who mentions the fact from observation, “ Their eyes appear to be swimming in bliss.”

Verse 26. By means of a whorish woman] In following lewd women, a man is soon reduced to poverty and disease. The Septuagint gives this a strange turn : Τιμη γαρ πορνικη, δαη και ενος αρτου. “ For the price or hire of a whore is about one loaf.” So many were they in the land, that they hired themselves out for a bare subsistence. The Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic, give the same sense. The old MS. Bible has it thus : The price forsothe of a strumpet is unneth oon lof : the woman forsothe taketh the precious lif of a man.
The sense of which is, and probably the sense of the Hebrew too, While the man hires the whore for a single adulteress will <sup>1</sup>hunt for the precious life.

27 Can a man take fire in his bosom, and his clothes not be burned?

28 Can one go upon hot coals, and his feet not be burned?

29 So he that goeth in to his neighbour's wife; whosoever toucheth her shall not be innocent.

30 Men do not despise a thief, if he steal to satisfy his soul when he is hungry;

loaf of bread; the woman thus hired taketh his precious life. She extracts his energy, and poisons his constitution. In the first clause וּנְשָׂה אִשְׁשָׁה ishshah zonah is plainly a prostitute; but should we render נְשָׂה esheth, in the second clause, an adulteress? I think not. The versions in general join אִשְׁתּ אִשׁ esheth ish, together, which, thus connected, signify no more than the wife of a man; and out of this we have made adulteress, and Coverdale a married woman. I do not think that the Old MS. Bible gives a good sense; and it requires a good deal of paraphrase to extract the common meaning from the text. Though the following verses seem to countenance the common interpretation, yet they may contain a complete sense of themselves; but, taken in either way, the sense is good, though the construction is a little violent.

Verse 27. Can a man take fire] These were proverbial expressions, the meaning of which was plain to every capacity.

Verse 29. So he that goeth in to his neighbour's wife] As sure as he who takes fire into his bosom, or who walks upon live coals, is burnt thereby; so sure he that seduces his neighbour's wife shall be guilty. That is, he shall be punished.

Verse 30. Men do not despise a thief, if he steal] Every man pities the poor culprit who was perishing for lack of food, and stole to satisfy his hunger; yet no law clears him: he is bound to make restitution; in some cases double, in others quadruple and quintuple; and if he have not property enough to make venfold; he shall give all the substance of his house.

32 But whoso committeth adultery with a woman <sup>1</sup>lacketh

33 A wound and dishonour shall he get; and his reproach shall not be wiped away.

34 For jealousy is the rage of a man: therefore he will not spare in the day of vengeance.

35 <sup>n</sup> He will not regard any ransom: neither will he rest content, though thou givest many gifts.

Verse 32. But whoso committeth adultery] The case understood is that of a married man: he has a wife; and therefore is not in the circumstances of the poor thief, who stole to appease his hunger, having nothing to eat. In this alone the opposition between the two cases is found: the thief had no food, and he stole some; the married man had a wife, and yet went in to the wife of his neighbour.

Destroyeth his own soul.] Sins against his life; for, under the law of Moses, adultery was punished with death; Lev. xx. 10; Deut. xxii. 22.

Verse 33. A wound and dishonour shall he get] Among the Romans, when a man was caught in the fact, the injured husband took the law into his own hand; and a large radish was thrust up into the anus of the transgressor, which not only overwhelmed him with infamy and disgrace, but generally caused his death.

Verse 34. Jealousy is the rage of a man: therefore he will not spare] He will not, when he has detected the adulterer in the fact, wait for the slow progress of the law: it is then to him the day of vengeance; and, in general, he avenges himself on the spot, as we see above.

Verse 35. He will not regard any ransom] This is an injury that admits of no compensation. No gifts can satisfy a man for the injury his honour has sustained; and to take a bribe or a ransom, would he setting up chastity at a price.

Verse 1. My son, keep my words] See chap. ii. 1.

Verse 2. As the apple of thine eye.] As the pupil of the eye, which is of such essential necessity to sight, and so easily injured.

Verse 3. Bind them upon thy fingers] See on chap.
iii. 3.

Verse 4. Thou art my sister] Thou art my dearest friend, and I will treat thee as such.

Verse 5. The strange woman] The prostitute, the adulteress.

Verse 6. I looked through my casement] The casement is a small aperture in a large window, or a window opening on hinges. Here it means the lattice, for they had no glass windows in the East. And the latticed windows produced a double advantage:
1. Making the apartments sufficiently private; and
2. Admitting fresh air to keep them cool.

Verse 7. Among the simple ones] The inexperienced, inconsiderate young men.

A young man void of understanding] לִב חָסֵר chasar leb, "destitute of a heart." He had not wisdom to discern the evil intended; nor courage to resist the flatteries of the seducer.

Verse 8. He went the way to her house.] She ap-able; and a way from the main street to it.

Verse 9. In the twilight, in the evening] Some time after sun-setting; before it was quite dark.

In the black and dark night] When there were neither lamps nor moon-shine.

Verse 10. A woman with the attire of a harlot] It appears that sitting in some open place, and covering the face, or having a veil of a peculiar kind on, was the evidence of a harlot; Gen. xxxviii. 14, 15–19.
No doubt, in Solomon's time, they had other distinctions. In all other countries, and in all times, the *show of their countenance did testify against them;

they declared their sin as Sodom; they hid it not.*
However, this does not seem to have been a mere prostitute; for she was, according to her own declaration, a married woman, and kept house, ver. 19, if her assertions relative to this were not falsehoods, and calculated the better to render him secure, and prevent the suspicion of endangering himself by co-habiting with a common woman; which I am rather inclined to think was the case, for she was subtle of heart.

Verse 11. She is loud and stubborn] הוֹמִיָּה homiyah, she is never at rest, always agitated; busily employed to gain her end, and this is to go into the path of error: כָּרֶרֶת sorereth, "turning aside;" preferring any way to the right way. And, therefore, it is added, her feet abide not in her house; she gads abroad; and this disposition probably first led her to this vice.

Verse 12. Now is she without] She is continually exposing herself, and showing by her gait and gestures what she is, and what she wants. These two verses are a parenthesis, intended to show the character of the woman.

Verse 13. So she caught him] Laid fast hold on him, and kissed him, to show that she was affectionately attached to him.

panyha, "she strengthened her countenance," assumed the most confident look she could; endeavoured to appear friendly and sincere.

Verse 14. I have peace-offerings with me] More literally, "the sacrifices of the peace-offerings are with me." Peace-offerings שְׁלָמִים shelamim, were offerings the spiritual design of which was to make peace between God and man, to make up the breach between them which sin had occasioned; see the notes on Lev.

law is explained. When the blood of these was poured out at the altar, and the fat burnt there, the breast and right shoulder were the priest's portion; but the rest of the carcass belonged to the sacrificer, who might carry it home, and make a feast to his friends. See Lev. iii. 1–11. Much light is cast on this place by the fact that the gods in many parts of the East are actually worshipped in brothels, and fragments of the offerings are divided among the wretches who fall into the snare of the prostitutes.—WARD'S Customs.

Have I payed my vows] She seems to insinuate that she had made a vow for the health and safety of this young man; and having done so, and prepared the sacrificial banquet, came actually out to seek him, that he might partake of it with her, ver. 15. But, as she intended to proceed farther than mere friendship, she was obliged to avail herself of the night season, and the absence of her husband.

Verse 16. I have decked my bed] אָרְסִי arsi, "my couch or sofa;" distinguished from מִשְׁכָּבִי mishcabi, "my bed," ver. 17, the place to sleep on, as the other was the place to recline on at meals. The tapestry, מַרְבָּדִים marbaddim, mentioned here seems to refer to the covering of the sofa; exquisitely woven and figured cloth. חַטְבוֹת חֲטָבִית chatuboth etun, the Targum translates painted carpets, such as were manufactured in Egypt; some kind of embroidered or embossed stuff is apparently meant.

Verse 17. I have perfumed my bed with myrrh] כִּנְמוֹר kinmor, "aloes," אֶהָלִים ohalim, and "cinnamon," קִנְמָנוֹ kinnamon. We have taken our names from the original words; but probably the ahalim may not mean aloes, which is no perfume: but sandal wood, which is very much used in the East. She had used every means to excite the passions she wished to bring into action.

Verse 18. Come, let us take our fill of love] נִרְוֶה נִרְוֶה nirveh dodim, "Let us revel in the breasts;" and then it is added, "Let us solace ourse<sup>s</sup> with loves," נִתְחַלְסֶה בְּאֹהָבִים nithallesah boohabim; "let us gratify each other with loves, with the utmost delights." This does not half express the original; but I forbear. The speech shows the brazen face of this woman, well translated by the Vulgate, "Veni, ine-

22 He goeth after her <sup>t</sup> straightway, as an ox goeth to the slaughter, or as a fool to the correction of the stocks:

23 Till a dart strike through his liver; <sup>a</sup> as a bird hasteth to the snare, and knoweth not that it is for his life.

24 Harken unto me now, therefore, O ye children, and attend to the words of my mouth.

25 Let not thine heart decline to her ways, go not astray in her paths.

briemur uberibus; et fruamur cupidinis amplexibus." And the Septuagint has expressed the spirit of it: Ελθε, και απολυσωμεν φιλιας—δευρο, και εγκλισθωμεν ερωτι. "Veni, et fruamur amicitia—Veni, et colluctemur eupidine." Though varied in the words, all the versions have expressed the same thing. In the old MS. Bible, the speech of this woman is as follows:—I have arrayed with cordis my litt bed, and spread with peynted tapetis of Egypt: I have sprungd my tigginge place with mirre and aloes and canelcum, and be we inwardly drunken with Tetts, and use we the covety tied clippings to the tyme that the day way light. The original itself is too gross to be literally translated; but quite in character as coming from the mouth of an abandoned woman.

Verse 19. For the good man] Literally, "For the man is not in his house."

Verse 20. He hath taken] Literally, "The money bag he hath taken in his hand." He is gone a journey of itinerant merchandising. This seems to be what is intended.

And will come home at the day appointed.] לֵיּוֹם הַכָּנָה leyom hakkase, the time fixed for a return from such a journey. The Vulgate says, "at the full moon." The Targum, "the day of the assembly." In other words, He will return by the approaching festival.

Verse 21. With her much fair speech] With her blandishments and lascivious talk, she overcame all his scruples, and constrained him to yield.

Verse 22. As an ox goeth to the slaughter] The original of this and the following verse has been variously translated. Dr. Grey corrects and translates thus: "He goeth after her straightway, as an ox goeth to the SLAUGHTER; as a DOG to the CHAIN; and as a DEER till the DART strike through his liver; as a BIRD hasteneth to the SNARE, and knoweth not that it is for its life." Very slight alterations in the Hebrew text produce these differences; but it is not necessary to pursue them; all serve to mark the stupidity and folly of the man who is led away by enticing women, or who lives a life of intemperance.

Verse 24. Hearken unto me now, therefore, O ye children] Ye that are young and inexperienced, seriously consider the example set before your eyes, and take warning at another's expense.

Verse 26. For she hath cast down many wounded : yea, many strong men have been slain by her.] That is, such like women have been the ruin of many. חללים chalalim, which we render wounded, also signifies soldiers or men of war; and עצמים atsumim, which we render strong men, may be translated heroes. Many of those who have distinguished themselves in the field and in the cabinet have been overcome and destroyed by their mistresses. History is full of such examples.

Verse 27. Her house is the way to hell] שואל sheol, the pit, the grave, the place of the dead, the eternal and infernal world. And they who, through such, fall into the grave, descend lower, into the chambers of death; the place where pleasure is at an end, and illusion mocks no more.

NOTES ON CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. Doth not wisdom cry?] Here wisdom is again personified; but the prosopopœia is carried on to a greater length than before, and with much more variety. It is represented in this chapter in a twofold point of view: 1. Wisdom, the power of judging rightly, implying the knowledge of Divine and human things. 2. As an attribute of God, particularly displayed in the various and astonishing works of creation. Nor has it any other meaning in this whole chapter, whatever some of the fathers may have dreamed, who find allegorical meanings every where. The wise man seems as if suddenly awakened from the distressful contemplation which he had before him,—of the ruin of young persons in both worlds by means of debauchery,—by the voice of wisdom, who has lifted up her voice in the most public places, where was the greatest concourse of the people, to warn the yet unsnared, that they might avoid the way of seduction and sin; and cause those who love her to inherit substance, and to have their treasuries filled with durable riches.

Verse 2. In the places of the paths.] בית נתיבת beith nethiboth nitstabah, "The constituted house of the paths." Does not this mean the house of public worship! the tabernacle or temple, which stands a centre to the surrounding villages, the paths from all the parts leading to and terminating at it? In such a place, where the holy word of God is read or preached, there in a particular manner does wisdom cry, and understanding lift up her voice. There are the warnings, the precepts, and the promises of eternal truth; there the bread of God is broken to his children, and thither they that will may come and take the water of life freely.

Verse 3. She crieth at the gates] This might be well applied to the preaching of Jesus Christ and his city, at the coming in at the doors.

4 Unto you, O men, I call; and my voice is to the sons of man.

5 O ye simple, understand wisdom: and ye fools, be ye of an understanding heart.

apostles, and their faithful successors in the Christian ministry. He went to the temple, and proclaimed the righteousness of the Most High: he did the same in the synagogues, on the mountains, by the sea-side, in the villages, in the streets of the cities, and in private houses. His disciples followed his track: in the same way, and in the same spirit, they proclaimed the unsearchable riches of Christ. God's wisdom in the hearts of his true ministers directs them to go and to seek sinners. There are, it is true, temples, synagogues, churches, chapels, &c.; but hundreds of thousands never frequent them, and therefore do not hear the voice of truth: wisdom, therefore, must go to them, if she wishes them to receive her instructions. Hence the zealous ministers of Christ go still to the highways and hedges, to the mountains and plains, to the ships and the cottages, to persuade sinners to turn from the error of their ways, and accept that redemption which was procured by the sacrificial offering of Jesus Christ.

Verse 4. Unto you, O men] אישם ishim, men of wealth and power, will I call; and not to you alone, for my voice is אל בני אדם al beney Adam, "to all the descendants of Adam;" to the whole human race. As Jesus Christ tasted death for every man, so the Gospel proclaims salvation to all: to you—to every individual, my voice is addressed. Thou hast sinned; and thou must perish, if not saved by grace.

Verse 5. O ye simple] פתאים pethaim, ye that are deceived, and with flattering words and fair speeches deluded and drawn away.

Ye fools] כסילים kesilim, ye stupid, stiff-necked, senseless people. That preaching is never likely to do much good, that is not pointed; specifying and describing vices, and charging them home on the consciences of transgressors. Where this is not done, the congregation is unconcerned; no man supposes he has any thing to do in the business, especially if the preacher takes care to tell them, "These were the crimes of Jews, Romans, Greeks, of the people at Corinth, Philippi, Thessalonica, Laodicea, and of heathens in general; but I hope better things of you, who have been born in a Christian land, and baptized in the Christian faith." Thus he arms their consciences in double brass against the good effects of his own teaching.

Verse 6. Hear; for I will speak of excellent things] נגידים negidim, things which are pre-eminent, and manifestly superior to all others. The teaching is not trifling, though addressed to triflers.

The opening of my lips shall be right things.] מישרים meysarim, things which are calculated to correct your false notions, and set straight your crooked ways. Hence she declares, Verse 7. My mouth shall speak truth] Truth, without falsity, or any mixture of error, shall be the whole matter of my discourse.

Verse 8. All the words—are in righteousness] בצדק betsedek, in justice and equity, testifying what man owes to his God, to his neighbour, and to himself; giving to each his due. This is the true import of צדק tsadak.

There is nothing froward] נפתל niphtal, tortuous, involved, or difficult.

Or perverse] עקש ikkesh, distorted, leading to obstinacy. On the contrary, Verse 9. They are all plain] נכוחים nechochim, straight forward, over against every man, level to every capacity. This is true of all that concerns the salvation of the soul.

To them that find knowledge.] When a man gets the knowledge of himself, then he sees all the threatenings of God to be right. When he obtains the knowledge of God in Christ, then he finds that all the promises of God are right—yea and amen.

11 <sup>g</sup> For wisdom is better than rubies; and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it.

12 I wisdom dwell with <sup>h</sup> prudence, and find out knowledge of witty inventions.

true wisdom is, it will lead to action, and its activity will be always in reference to the accomplishment of the best ends by the use of the most appropriate means. Hence comes what is here called knowledge of witty inventions, דעת חוכמות אמצא daath mezinmath emtsa, "I have found out knowledge and contrivance." The farther wisdom proceeds in man, the more practical knowledge it gains; and finding out the nature and properties of things, and the general course of providence, it can contrive by new combinations to produce new results.

Verse 13. The fear of the Lord is to hate evil] As it is impossible to hate evil without loving good; and as hatred to evil will lead a man to abandon the evil way; and love to goodness will lead him to do what is right in the sight of God, under the influence of that Spirit which has given the hatred to evil, and inspired the love of goodness: hence this implies the sum and substance of true religion, which is here termed the fear of the Lord.

Verse 14. Counsel is mine] Direction how to act in all circumstances and on all occasions must come from wisdom: the foolish man can give no counsel, cannot show another how he is to act in the various changes and chances of life. The wise man alone can give this counsel; and he can give it only as continually receiving instruction from God: for this Divine wisdom can say, תושיה tushiyah, substance, reality, essence, all belong to me: I am the Fountain whence all are derived. Man may be wise, and good, and prudent, and ingenious; but these he derives from me, and they are dependently in him. But in me all these are independently and essentially inherent.

And sound wisdom] See above. This is a totally false translation: תושיה tushiyah means essence, substance, reality; the source and substance of good. How ridiculous the support derived by certain authors from this translation in behalf of their system! See the writers on and quoters of Prov. viii.

I have strength.] Speaking still of wisdom, as communicating rays of its light to man, it enables him to bring every thing to his aid; to construct machines by which one man can do the work of hundreds. From it comes all mathematical learning, all mechanical knowledge; from it originally came the inclined plane, the wedge, the screw, the pulley, in all its multiplications ; and the lever, in all its combinations and varieties, came from this wisdom. And as all these can produce prodigies of power, far surpassing all kinds of animal energy, and all the effects of the utmost efforts of muscular force ; hence the maxim of Lord Bacon, " Knowledge is power," built on the maxim of the tushiyah itself ; לִי גְבוּרָה li geburah, MINE IS STRENGTH.

Verse 15. By me kings reign] Every wise and prudent king is such through the influence of Divine wisdom. And just laws and their righteous administration come from this source. In this and the following verse five degrees of civil power and authority are mentioned. 1. מְלָכִים melachim, KINGS. 2. רוֹנִים razenim, CONSULS. 3. שָׂרִים sarim, PRINCES, CHIEFS of the people. 4. נְדִיבִים nedibim, NOBLES. And 5. שֹׁפְטִים shophetim, JUDGES or CIVIL MAGISTRATES. All orders of government are from God. Instead of שְׂפָטֵי אָרֶץ shaphetei arets, "judges of the earth," שְׂפָטֵי צֶדֶק shaphetei tsedek, "righteous judges," or "judges of righteousness," is the reading of one hundred and sixty-two of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., both in the text and in the margin, and of several ancient editions. And this is the reading of the Vulgate, the Chaldee, and the Syriac ; and should undoubtedly supersede the other.

Verse 17. I love them that love me] Wisdom shows itself ; teaches man the knowledge of himself ; shows him also the will of God concerning him ; manifests the snares and dangers of life, the allurements and unsatisfactory nature of all sensual and sinful pleasures, the blessedness of true religion, and the solid happiness which an upright soul derives from the peace and approbation of its Maker. If, then, the heart embraces this wisdom, follows this Divine teaching, and gives itself to God, his love will be shed abroad in it by the influence of the Holy Spirit. Thus we love God because he hath first loved us ; and the more we love him, the more we shall feel of his love, which will enable us to love him yet more and more ; and thus we may go on increasing to eternity. Blessed be God !

And those that seek me early shall find me.] Not merely betimes in the morning, though he who does so shall find it greatly to his advantage ; (see on Ps. iv. ;) but early in life—in youth, and as near as possible to the first dawn of reason. To the young this gracious promise is particularly made : if they seek, they shall find. Others, who are old, may seek and find ; but never to such advantage as they would have done, had they sought early. Youth is the time of advantage in every respect : it is the time of learning, the time of discipline ; the time of improvement, the time of acquiring useful, solid, and gracious habits. As the first-fruits always belong to God, it is God's time ; the time in which he is peculiarly gracious ; and in which, to sincere youthful seekers, he pours out his benefits with great profusion. " They that seek me early shall find me."

Hear, ye young, and ye little ones ! God offers himself now to you, with all his treasures of grace and glory. Thank him for his ineffable mercy, and embrace it without delay.

Verse 18. Riches and honour are with me] Often the wise, prudent, and discreet man arrives literally to riches and honour ; but this is not always the case. But there are other riches of which he never fails ; and these seem to be what Solomon has particularly in view, durable riches and righteousness ; the treasure deposited by God in earthen vessels.

Verse 20. I lead in the way of righteousness] Nothing but the teaching that comes from God by his word and Spirit can do this.

Verse 22. The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way] Wisdom is not acquired by the Divine Being ; man, and even angels, learn it by slow and progressive degrees ; but in God it is as eternally inherent as any other essential attribute of his nature. The Targum makes this wisdom a creature, by thus translating the passage : אֱלֹהָ בְרָאֲנִי בִרְיִשׁ בִּירְתִּיָּה Elaha barani bereish biritiah, " God created me in the beginning of his creatures." The Syriac is the same. This is as absurd and heretical as some modern glosses on the same passage.

Verse 23. I was set up from everlasting] נִסְכָּחִי nissachti, " I was diffused or poured out," from נָסַךְ nasach, " to diffuse, pour abroad, as a spirit or disposition," Isa. xxix. 10. See Parkhurst. Or from כָּן sach, " to cover, overspread, smear over, as with oil ;" to be anointed king. Hence some have translated it, principatum habui, I had the principality, or was a ruler, governor, and director, from eternity. All the schemes, plans, and circumstances, relative to creation, government, providence, and to all being, material, animal, and intellectual, were conceived in the Divine mind, by the Divine wisdom, from eternity, or ever the earth was. There was no fortuitous creation, no

tehomoth, before the original chaotic mass was formed.
See Gen i. 2.

I was brought forth] חוללתי cholalti, "I was produced as by labouring throes." Mr. Parkhurst thinks that the heathen poets derived their idea of Minerva's (wisdom's) being born of Jupiter's brain, from some such high poetic personification as that in the text.

Verse 26. The highest part of the dust of the world] הַבִּל רֹאשׁ יִפְרוֹת תֵּבֵל rosh ophroth tebel, "the first particle of matter." The prima materia, the primitive atom.
All these verses (3–29) are a periphrasis for I existed before creation; consequently before time was. I dwelt in God as a principle which might be communicated in its influences to intellectual beings when formed.

Verse 27. When he prepared the heavens, I was there] For there is no part of the creation of God in which wisdom, skill, contrivance, are more manifest, than in the construction of the visible heavens.

When he set a compass upon the face of the depth] Does not this refer to the establishment of the law of gravitation? by which all the particles of matter, tending to a common centre, would produce in all bodies the orbicular form, which we see them have; so that even the waters are not only retained within their boundaries, but are subjected to the circular form, in their great aggregate of seas, as other parts of matter are. This is called here making a compass, כָּחַק חוּג bechukko chug, sweeping a circle; and even this on the face of the deep, to bring the chaotic mass into form, regularity, and order.

Verse 28. The clouds above] שְׁחָקִים shechakim,
"the ethereal regions," taking in the whole of the atmosphere, with all its meteors, clouds, vapours, &c.

Verse 29. When he gave to the sea his decree]
When he assigned its limits, adjusted its saltiness, and proportioned the extent of the surface to the quantity of vapours to be raised from it, for the irrigation of laws by which all its motions are governed; its annual and diurnal rotation, and particularly its centrifugal and centripetal forces; by the former of which it has its annual motion round the sun like all other planets; and by the latter all its particles are prevented from flying off, notwithstanding the great velocity of its motion round its own axis, which causes one thousand and forty-two miles of its equator to pass under any given point in the heavens in the course of a single hour! These are, properly speaking, the foundations of the earth; the principles on which it is constructed, and the laws by which it is governed.

Verse 30. Then I was with him, as one brought up] אִמּוֹן amon, a nursing, a darling child. Wisdom continues its parable, says Calmet; and represents itself as a new-born child, which is ever near its parent, and takes pleasure to see him act, and to sport in his presence. This is poetical and highly figurative; and they who think they find the deity of Jesus Christ in these metaphors should be very cautious how they apply such terms as these; so that while they are endeavouring to defend the truth, they may do nothing against the truth, in which most of them unhappily fail.

Rejoicing always before him] All the images in this verse are borrowed from the state and circumstances of a darling, affectionate, playful child; as any one will be convinced who examines the Hebrew text.

Verse 31. Rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth] There God displays especially his wisdom in ordering and directing human beings, and in providing for their wants. The wisdom of God is in an especial manner manifested in his providence.

My delights were with the sons of men.] This Divine wisdom, as it delighted in the creation of man, so it continues to delight in his instruction. Hence it is represented as offering its lessons of instruction continually, and using every means and opportunity to call men from folly and vice to sound knowledge, holiness, and happiness. It is to man that God especially gives wisdom; and he has it in the form of reason beyond all other creatures; therefore it is said, "My delights are with the sons of men;" to them I open my choicest treasures. They alone are capable of sapience, intelligence, and discursive reason.

Verse 32. Now therefore] Since I delight so much in conveying instruction; since I have the happiness of the children of Adam so much at heart, hearken unto me; and this is for your own interest, for blessed are they who keep my ways.

Verse 34. Watching daily at my gates] Wisdom is represented as having a school for the instruction of men; and seems to point out some of the most forward of her scholars coming, through their intense desire to learn, even before the gates were opened, and waiting there for admission, that they might hear every word that was uttered, and not lose one accent of the heavenly teaching. Blessed are such.

Verse 35. Whoso findeth me] The wisdom that comes from God, teaching to avoid evil and cleave to that which is good; findeth life—gets that knowledge which qualifies him to answer the purposes for which he was made; for he is quickened with Christ, and made a partaker of the Divine life. Christ dwells in his heart by faith; he lives a new life, for Christ liveth in him; the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus makes him free from the law of sin and death. And shall obtain favour of the Lord. The more he walks after the Divine counsel, the more he obtains of the Divine image; and the more he resembles his Maker, the more he partakes of the Divine favour.

Verse 36. Wrongeth his own soul] It is not Satan, it is not sin, properly speaking, that hurts him; it is himself. If he received the teaching of God, sin would have no dominion over him; if he resisted the devil, the devil would flee from him.

Love death.] They do it in effect, if not in fact; for as they love sin, that leads to death, so they may be justly said to love death, the wages of sin. He that works in this case, works for wages; and he must love the wages, seeing he labours so hard in the work.

I HAVE gone through this fine chapter, and given the best exposition of it in my power. I have also, as well as others, weighed every word, and closely examined their radical import, their connection among themselves, and the connection of the subject of the chapter with what has gone before, and with what follows after; and I cannot come, conscientiously, to any other interpretation than that which I have given. I am thoroughly satisfied that it speaks not one word either about the Divine or human nature of Christ, much less of any eternal filiation of his Divinity. And I am fully persuaded, had there not been a pre-conceived creed, no soul of man, by fair criticism, would have ever found out that fond opinion of the eternal sonship of the Divine nature, which so many commentators persuade us they find here. That it has been thus applied in early ages, as well as in modern times, I am sufficiently aware; and that many other portions of the Divine records have been appealed to, in order to support a particular opinion, and many that were false in themselves, must be known to those who are acquainted with the fathers. But many quote them who know nothing of them. As to the fathers in general, they were not all agreed on this subject, some supposing Christ, others the Holy Spirit, was meant in this chapter. But of these we may safely state, that there is not a truth in the most orthodox creed, that cannot be proved by their authority, nor a heresy that has disgraced the Romish Church, that may not challenge them as its abettors. In points of doctrine, their authority is, with me, nothing. The word of God alone contains my creed. On a number of points I can go to the Greek and Latin fathers of the Church, to know what they believed, and what the people of their respective communions believed; but after all this I must return to God's word, to know what he would have me to believe. No part of a Protestant creed stands on the decision of fathers and councils. By appealing to the Bible alone, as the only rule for the faith and practice of Christians, they confounded and defeated their papistical adversaries, who could not prove their doctrines but by fathers and councils. Hence their peculiar doctrines stand in their ultimate proof upon THESE; and those of Protestantism on the BIBLE. Some late writers upon this subject, whose names I spare, have presumed much on what they have said on this subject; but before any man, who seeks for sober truth, will receive any of their conclusions, he will naturally look whether their premises be sound, or whether from sound principles they have drawn legitimate conclusions. They say this chapter is a sufficient foundation to build their doctrine on. I say it is no foundation at all; that it never has been proved, and never can be proved, that it speaks at all of the doctrine in question. It has nothing to do with it. On this conviction of mine, their proofs drawn from this chapter must go with me for nothing. I have been even shocked with reading over some things that have been lately written on the subject. I have said in my heart, They have taken away my ETERNAL LORD, and I know not where they have laid him. I cannot believe their doctrine; I never did; I hope I never shall. I believe in the holy Trinity; in three persons in the Godhead, of which none is before or after another. I believe JEHOVAH, JESUS, the HOLY GHOST to be one infinite, eternal GOD-HEAD, subsisting ineffably in three persons. I believe Jesus the Christ to be, as to his Divine nature, as un-originated and eternal as JEHOVAH himself; and with the Holy Ghost to be one infinite Godhead, neither person being created, begotten, nor proceeding, more than another : as to its essence, but one TRINITY, in an infinite, eternal, and inseparable UNITY. And this TRIUNE God is the object of my faith, my adoration, and my confidence. But I believe not in an eternal sonship or generation of the Divine nature of Jesus Christ. Here I have long stood, here I now stand, and here I trust to stand in the hour of death, in the day of judgment, and to all eternity. Taking the Scriptures in general, I find a plurality in the Divine nature ; taking the grand part mentioned, Matt. iii. 16, 17, I find that plurality restrained to a trinity, in the most unequivocal and evident manner : Jesus, who was baptized in Jordan ; the HOLY GHOST, who descended upon him who was baptized ; and the FATHER, manifested by the voice from heaven that said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." And how that person called Jesus the CHRIST, in whom dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, could be called the Son of God, I have shown in my note on Luke i. 35.

Some writers, in their defence of the doctrine above, which I venture to say I do not believe, have made reflections, in real or pretended pity, on the belief of their Trinitarian brethren, which have very little to do with candour : viz., "How the supporters of this hypothesis can avoid either the error of Tritheism on the one hand, or Sabellianism on the other, is difficult to conceive." Now, the supporters of the doctrine of the underived and unbegotten eternity of Christ's Divine nature might as well say of them : How the supporters of the eternal sonship of Christ can avoid the error of Arianism on the one hand, and Arianism on the other, it is difficult to conceive. But I would not say so ; for though I know Arians who hold that doctrine, and express their belief nearly in the same words ; yet I know many most conscientious Trinitarians who hold the doctrine of the eternal sonship, and yet believe in the proper deity, or eternal godhead, of Jesus Christ. After all, as a very wise and excellent man lately said : "While we have every reason to be satisfied of the soundness of each other's faith, we must allow each to explain his own sentiments in his own words : here, in the words used in explanation, a little latitude may be safely allowed." To this correct sentiment I only add :—

"I grant it ; and the license give and take."

I have passed the waters of strife, and do not wish to recross them : the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. I will have nothing to do with ill-tempered, abusive men ; I wish them more light and better manners.

And while I am on this subject, let me add one thing, which I am sure will not please all the generation of his people ; and it is this : that Jesus Christ, having taken upon him human nature, which was afterwards crucified, and expired upon the cross, did by those acts make a full, perfect, and sufficient offering, sacrifice, and atonement for the sin of the whole world. That he died, paid down the redemption price, for every soul of man, that was ever born into the world, and shall ever be born into it. That all who lay hold on the hope set before them shall be saved ; (and all may thus lay hold ;) and none shall perish but those who would not come to Christ that they might have life. And that men perish, not because they were not redeemed, but because they would not accept of the redemption.

To conclude on this subject, it will be necessary to refer the reader to the remarkable opposition that subsists between this and the preceding chapter. There, the prostitute is represented as going out into the streets to seek her prey ; and the alluring words of carnal wisdom to excite the animal appetite to sinful gratification, which she uses : here, heavenly wisdom is represented as going out into the streets, to the high places, the gates of the city, to counteract her designs, and lead back the simple to God and truth.

These personifications were frequent among the Jews. In the Book of Ecclesiasticus we find a similar personification, and expressed in almost similar terms ; and surely none will suppose that the writer of that Apocryphal book had either the Christian doctrine of the Trinity, or the sonship of Christ in view.

I will give a few passages :—

"WISDOM shall glory in the midst of her people ; in the congregation of the Most High shall she open her mouth, and triumph before his power. I came out of the mouth of the Most High, and covered the earth as a cloud. I dwell in the high places ; I alone compassed the circuit of the heaven, and walked in the bottom of the deep, in the waves of the sea, and in all the earth. He created me from the beginning, before the world ; and I shall never fail. I am the mother of fair love, and fear, and knowledge, and holy hope. I therefore, being eternal, am given to all my children which are named of him. Come unto me, and fill yourselves with my fruits. I also came out as a brook from a river, and a conduit into a garden," &c., &c., Eccl. xxiv. 1, &c. This kind of personification of wisdom we have had in the preceding chapters ; and in the following chapter we shall find the figure still kept up.

NOTES ON CHAP. IX.

The same Wisdom speaks here who spoke in the preceding chapter. There she represented herself as manifest in all the works of God in the natural world ; all being constructed according to counsels proceeding from an infinite understanding. Here, she represents herself as the great potentate, who was to rule all that she had constructed ; and having an immense family to provide for, had made an abundant provision, and calls all to partake of it. This, says Calmet, is the continuation of the parable begun in the preceding chapter, where wisdom is represented as a venerable lady, whose real beauties and solid promises are opposed to the false allurements of PLEASURE, who was represented in the seventh chapter under the idea of a debauched and impudent woman. This one, to draw young people into her snares, describes the perfumes, the bed, and the festival which she has prepared. Wisdom acts in the same way : but, instead of the debauchery, the false pleasures, and the criminal connections which pleasure had promised, offers her guests a strong, well-built, magnificent palace, chaste and solid pleasures, salutary instructions, and a life crowned with blessedness. This is the sum and the substance of the parable ; but as in the preceding part, so in this, men have produced strange creatures of their own brain, by way of explanation. One specimen of this mode of interpretation may suffice.

The house built by wisdom is the holy humanity of Jesus Christ ; the seven pillars are the seven sacraments, or the seven gifts of the Holy Ghost, or the whole of the apostles, preachers, and ministers of the Church ; the slain beasts are the sacrifice of Christ's body upon the cross ; and the bread and mingled wine are the bread and wine in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper ! — FATHERS and DOCTORS.

If we have recourse to any other particulars than those given above in the summary of the chapter, let us follow the first part of the parable, where wisdom is represented as laying the plan of the creation ; and then perhaps we may say with safety, that wisdom, having produced the grand ichnograph or ground plot of the whole, with all the requisite elevations and specifications of materials, comes to show us, in this part, that the whole has been constructed on this plan ; and specifies the end for which this august building has been raised.

Verse 1. Wisdom hath builded her house] The eternal counsel of God has framed the universe.

She hath hewn out her seven pillars] Every thing has been so constructed as to exhibit a scene of grandeur, stability, and durability.

Verse 2. She hath killed her beasts] God has made the most ample provision for the innumerable tribes of animal and intellectual beings, which people the whole vortex of created nature.

Verse 3. She hath sent forth her maidens] The wisdom of God has made use of the most proper means to communicate Divine knowledge to the inhabitants of the earth ; as a good and gracious Creator wills to teach them whence they came, how they are supported, whither they are going, and for what end they were formed. It is a custom to the present day, in Asiatic countries, to send their invitations to guests by a company of females, preceded by eunuchs : they go to the doors of the invited, and deliver their message.

Verse 4. Whoso is simple] Let the young, heedless, and giddy attend to my teaching.

Him that wanteth understanding] Literally, he that wanteth a heart ; who is without courage, is feeble and fickle, and easily drawn aside from the holy commandment.

Verse 5. Come, eat of my bread] Not only receive my instructions, but act according to my directions.

Drink of the wine—I have mingled.] Enter into my counsels ; be not contented with superficial knowledge on any subject, where any thing deeper may be attained. Go by the streams to the fountain head. Look into the principles on which they were formed ; investigate their nature, examine their properties, acquaint thyself with their relations, connections, influences, and various uses. See the skill, power, and goodness of God in their creation. And when thou hast learned all within thy reach, know that thou knowest but little of the manifold wisdom of God. Let what thou hast learned humble thee, by showing thee how very little thou dost know. Thou hast drunk of the provided wine ; but that wine was mingled with water, for God will hide pride from man. He dwells only on the surface of religious and philosophical learning, who does not perceive and feel that he is yet but a child in knowledge ; that he sees through a glass darkly ; that he perceives men like trees walking ; and that there are lengths, breadths, depths, and heights, in the works and ways of God, which it will require an eternity to fathom. Here below the pure wine is mingled with water : but this is God's work. Yet there is enough ; do not therefore be contented with a little. To this subject the words of the poet may be well applied :—

A little learning is a dangerous thing ;

Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring :

For scanty draughts intoxicate the brain,

But drinking largely sobers us again.

Among the ancient Jews, Greek, and Romans, wine was rarely drank without being mingled with water ; and among ancient writers we find several ordinances for this. Some direct three parts of water to one of wine ; some five parts ; and Pliny mentions some wines that required twenty waters : but the most common proportions appear to have been three parts of water to two of wine. But probably the יין כסך "yayin masach, mingled wine, was wine mingled, not with water, to make it weaker ; but with spices and other ingredients to make it stronger. The ingredients were honey, myrrh, mandragora, opium, and such like, which gave it not only an intoxicating but stupifying quality also. Perhaps the mixed wine here may mean wine of the strongest and best quality, that which was good to cheer and refresh the heart of man.

If we consider the mixed wine as meaning this strong wine, then the import of the metaphor will be, a thorough investigation of the works of God will invigorate the soul, strengthen all the mental powers, enlarge their capacity, and enable the mind to take the most exalted views of the wonders of God's skill manifested in the operations of his hand.

Verse 6. Forsake the foolish] For the companion of fools must be a fool.

And live] Answer the end for which thou wert born.

Verse 7. He that reproveth a scorner] לץ lets, the person who mocks at sacred things ; the libertine, the infidel ; who turns the most serious things into ridicule, and, by his wit, often succeeds in rendering the person who reproves him ridiculous. Wisdom seems here to intimate that it is vain to attempt by reproof to amend such : and yet we must not suffer sin upon our neighbour ; at all hazards, we must deliver our own soul. But no reproof should be given to any, but in the spirit of love and deep concern ; and when they contradict and blaspheme, leave them to God.

Verse 9. Give instruction to a wise man] Literally give to the wise, and he will be wise. Whatever you give to such, they reap profit from it. They are like hee, they extract honey from every flower.

Verse 11. For by me thy days shall be multiplied] Vice shortens human life, by a necessity of consequence : and by the same, righteousness lengthens it. There is a long addition here in the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate : " He who trusts in falsity feeds on the winds ; and is like him who chases the fowls of heaven. He forsakes the way of his own vineyard, and errs from the paths of his own inheritance. He enters also into lonely and desert places, and into a land abandoned to thirst ; and his hands collect that which yieldeth no fruit."

Verse 12. If thou be wise] It is thy own interest to be religious. Though thy example may be very useful to thy neighbours and friends, yet the chief benefit is to thyself. But if thou scorn—refuse to receive—the doctrines of wisdom, and die in thy sins, thou alone shalt suffer the vengeance of an offended God.

Verse 13. A foolish woman is clamorous] Vain, empty women, are those that make most noise. And she that is full of clamour, has generally little or no sense. We have had this character already, see chap. vii. 11. The translation of the Septuagint is very remarkable : Γυνή ἀφρων και θρασεια, ενδεης ψωμων γινεται, " A lewd and foolish woman shall be in need of a morsel of bread."

Verse 14. For she sitteth at the door of her house] Her conduct here marks at once her folly, impudence, and poverty. See above on chap. vii. 6, &c., where the reader will find a similar character.

Verse 16. Whoso is simple, let him turn in hither] FOLLY or PLEASURE here personified, uses the very same expressions as employed by Wisdom, ver. 4. Wisdom says, " Let the simple turn in to me." No, says Folly, " Let the simple turn in to me." If he turn in to Wisdom, his folly shall be taken away, and he shall become wise ; if he turn in to Folly, his darkness will be thickened, and his folly will remain.

DE FOE.

Verse. 17. Stolen waters are sweet] I suppose this to be a proverbial mode of expression, importing that illicit pleasures are sweeter than those which are legal. The meaning is easy to be discerned; and the conduct of multitudes shows that they are ruled by this adage. On it are built all the adulterous intercourses in the land.

Her guests are in the depths of hell.] Those who have been drawn out of the way of understanding by profligacy have in general lost their lives, if not their souls, by their folly. The Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic make a long addition to this verse: "But draw thou back, that thou mayest not die in this place; neither fix thy eyes upon her; so shalt thou pass by those strange waters. But abstain thou from strange waters, and drink not of another's fountain, that thou mayest live a long time, and that years may be added to thy life." Of this addition there is nothing in the Hebrew, the Chaldee, or the Vulgate, as now printed: but in the editio princeps are the following words:—Qui enim applicabitur illi descendet ad inferos; nam qui abscesserit ab ea salvabitur. These words were in the copy from which my old MS. Bible has been made, as the following version proves: Who forsoth schal ben joyned to hir, schal falle down in to hell: for whi he that goth awai fro hir, schal be saved. Three of my own MSS. have the same reading.

CHAPTER X.

It is impossible to give summaries of such chapters as these, where almost every verse contains a separate subject. Our common version not being able to exhibit the contents as usual, simply says, "From this chapter to the five and twentieth are sundry observations upon moral virtues, and their opposite verses." In general the wise man states in this chapter the difference between the wise and the foolish, the righteous and the wicked, the diligent and the idle. He speaks also of love and hatred, of the good and the evil tongue, or of the slanderer and the peace-maker.

NOTES ON CHAP. X.

Verse 1. The proverbs of Solomon] Some ancient MSS. of the Vulgate have Proverbiorum liber secundus, "The second book of the Proverbs." The preceding nine chapters can only be considered as an introduction, if indeed they may be said to make even a part, of the proverbs of Solomon, which appear to commence only at the tenth chapter.

A wise son maketh a glad father] The parallels in this and several of the succeeding chapters are those which Bishop Lowth calls the antithetic; when two lines correspond with each other by an opposition of terms and sentiments; when the second is contrasted with the first; sometimes in expression, sometimes in sense only. Accordingly the degrees of antithesis are various; from an exact contraposition of word to word, through a whole sentence, down to a general disparity, with something of a contrariety in the two propositions, as :—

A wise son rejoiceth in his father.

But a foolish son is the grief of his mother.

Verse 3. But he casteth away the substance of the wicked.] But instead of רשעים reshaim, the wicked, בוגדים bogedim, hypocrites, or perfidious persons, is the reading of twelve or fourteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., and some editions; but it is not acknowledged by any of the ancient versions.

The righteous have God for their feeder; and because of his infinite bounty, they can never famish for want of the bread of life. On the contrary, the wicked are often, in the course of his providence, deprived of the property of which they make a bad use.

Verse 4. He becometh poor] God has ordered, in the course of his providence, that he who will not work shall not eat. And he always blesses the work of the industrious man.

Verse 5. He that gathereth in summer] All the work of the field should be done in the season suitable to it. If summer and harvest be neglected, in vain does a man expect the fruits of autumn.

Verse 6. Violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.] As blessings shall be on the head of the just, so the violence of the wicked shall cover their face with shame and confusion. Their own violent dealings shall be visited upon them. The mouth forsooth of unrighteous men wickedness covereth.—Old MS. Bible. "The forehead of the ungodly is past shame, and presumptuous."—Coverdale.

Verse 7. The memory of the just is blessed] Or, is a blessing.

But the name of the wicked shall rot.] This is another antithesis; but there are only two antithetic terms, for memory and name are synonymous.—Lowth. The very name of the wicked is as offensive as putrid carrion.

ceive the commandment: but the shallow blabbing fool shall be cast down. See verse 10.

Verse 9. He that walketh uprightly] The upright man is always safe; he has not two characters to support; he goes straight forward, and is never afraid of detection, because he has never been influenced by hypocrisy or deceit.

Verse 10. He that winketh with the eye] Instead of the latter clause, on which see ver. 8, the Septuagint has, ὁ δε ελεγχων μετα παρηγγελιας ειρηνοποιει "but he that reproveth with freedom, maketh peace." This is also the reading of the Syriac and Arabic. A faithful, open reproving of sin is more likely to promote the peace of society than the passing it by slightly, or taking no notice of it; for if the wicked turn to God at the reproof, the law of peace will soon be established in his heart, and the law of kindness will flow from his tongue.

Verse 11. The mouth of a righteous man is a well of life] מקור חיים mekor chaiyim, is the vein of lives; an allusion to the great aorta, which conveys the blood from the heart to every part of the body. The latter clause of this verse is the same with that of verse 6.

Verse 12. Hatred stirreth up strifes] It seeks for occasions to provoke enmity. It delights in broils. On the contrary, love conciliates; removes aggravations; puts the best construction on every thing; and pours water, not oil, upon the flame.

Verse 13. A rod is for the back of him] He that can learn, and will not learn, should be made to learn. The rod is a most powerful instrument of knowledge. Judiciously applied, there is a lesson of profound wisdom in every twig.

Verse 14. Wise men lay up knowledge] They keep secret every thing that has a tendency to disturb domestic or public peace; but the foolish man blabs all out, and produces much mischief. Think much,

Verse 15. The rich man's wealth is his strong city] Behold a mystery in providence ; there is not a rich man on earth but becomes such by means of the poor ! Property comes from the labour of the poor, and the king himself is served of the field. How unjust, diabolically so, is it to despise or oppress those by whose labour all property is acquired !

The destruction of the poor is their poverty.] A man in abject poverty never arises out of this pit. They have no nucleus about which property may aggregate. The poet spoke well :—

Haud facile emergunt, quorum virtutibus obstat
Res angusta domi.

Verse 16. The labour of the righteous] The good man labours that he may be able to support life ; this is his first object : and then to have something to divide with the poor ; this is his next object.

The fruit of the wicked to sin.] This man lives to eat and drink, and his property he spends in riot and excess. God's blessings are cursed to him.

Verse 17. He is in the way of life] The truly religious man accumulates knowledge that he may the better know how to live to God, and do most good among men.

Verse 18. He that hideth] This is a common case. How many, when full of resentment, and deadly hatred, meditating revenge and cruelty, and sometimes even murder, have pretended that they thought nothing of the injury they had sustained ; had passed by the insult, &c. ! Thus lying lips covered the malevolence of a wicked heart.

Verse 19. In the multitude of words] It is impossible to speak much, and yet speak nothing but rich, and he addeth no sorrow with it.

23 <sup>f</sup> It is as sport to a fool to do mischief : but a man of understanding hath wisdom.

24 <sup>g</sup> The fear of the wicked, it shall come upon him : but <sup>h</sup> the desire of the righteous shall be granted.

25 As the whirlwind passeth, <sup>i</sup> so is the wicked no more : but <sup>k</sup> the righteous is an everlasting foundation.

26 As vinegar to the teeth, and as smoke to the eyes, so is the sluggard to them that send him.

Verse 20. The heart of the wicked is little worth] כִּמְצִיט kimat, is like little or nothing ; or is like dross, while the tongue of the just is like silver. A sinner's heart is worth nothing, and is good for nothing ; and yet because it is his most hidden part, he vaunts of its honesty, goodness, &c. ! Yes, yes ; it is very honest and good, only the devil is in it ! that is all.

Verse 22. The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich] Whatever we receive in the way of providence, has God's blessing in it, and will do us good. Cares, troubles, and difficulties come with all property not acquired in this way ; but God's blessing gives simple enjoyment, and levies no tax upon the comfort.

Verse 23. It is a sport to a fool to do mischief] What a millstone weight of iniquity hangs about the necks of most of the jesters, facetious and witty people ! “How many lies do they tell in jest, to go to the devil in earnest !”

Verse 24. The fear of the wicked] The wicked is full of fears and alarms ; and all that he has dreaded, and more than he has dreaded, shall come upon him. The righteous is always desiring more of the salvation of God, and God will exceed even his utmost desires.

Verse 25. As the whirlwind passeth] As tornadoes that sweep every thing away before them ; so shall the wrath of God sweep away the wicked ; it shall leave him neither branch nor root. But the righteous, being built on the eternal foundation, יְסוֹד עוֹלָם yesod olam, shall never be shaken.

Verse 26. As vinegar to the teeth] The acid softening and dissolving the alkali of the bone, so as to impair their texture, and render them incapable of masticating ; and as smoke affects the eyes, irritating their tender vessels, so as to give pain and prevent distinct vision ; so the sluggard, the lounging, thriftless messenger, who never returns in time with the desired answer.

Verse 28. The expectation of the wicked shall perish. A wicked man is always imposing on himself by the hope of God's mercy and final happiness ; and he continues hoping, till he dies without receiving that mercy which alone would entitle him to that glory.

Verse 29. The way of the Lord is strength In the path of obedience the upright man ever finds his strength renewed ; the more he labours the stronger he grows. The same sentiment as that in Isa. xl. 31.

Verse 30. The righteous shall never be removed Because he is built on the eternal foundation. See on ver. 25.

Verse 31. The froward tongue shall be cut out.

but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth.

31 The mouth of the just bringeth forth wisdom : but the froward tongue shall be cut out.

32 The lips of the righteous know what is acceptable : but the mouth of the wicked speaketh frowardness.

° Heb. frowardness.

This probably alludes to the punishment of cutting out the tongue for blasphemy, treasonable speeches, profane swearing, or such like. The tongue of screech-owls shall perish. — Old MS. Bible. Were the tongue of every shrew or scold to be extracted, we should soon have much less noise in the world.

Verse 32. The lips of the righteous know what is acceptable And what they believe to be most pleasing and most profitable, that they speak ; but the wicked man knows as well what is perverse, and that he speaketh forth. As the love of God is not in his heart ; so the law of kindness is not on his lips.

NOTES ON CHAP. XI.

Verse 1. A false balance is abomination This refers to the balance itself deceitfully constructed, so that it is sooner turned at one end than at the other. This is occasioned by one end of the beam being longer than the other.

But a just weight] שְׁלֵמָה eben shelemah, the perfect stone, probably because weights were first made of stone ; see the law, Deut. xxv. 13-35.

Verse 2. When pride cometh The proud man thinks much more of himself than any other can do ; and, expecting to be treated according to his own supposed worth, which treatment he seldom meets with, he is repeatedly mortified, ashamed, confounded, and rendered indignant.

The humble man looks for nothing but justice ; has the meanest opinion of himself ; expects nothing in the way of commendation or praise ; and can never be disappointed but in receiving praise, which he neither expects nor desires.

Verse 4. Riches profit not in the day of wrath Among men they can do all things ; but they cannot purchase the remission of sins, nor turn aside the wrath of God when that is poured out upon the opulent transgressor.

Verse 7. When a wicked man dieth HOPE is a great blessing to man in his present state of trial and suffering ; because it leads him to expect a favourable tion shall perish : and the hope of unjust men perisheth.

8 <sup>1</sup> The righteous is delivered out of trouble, and the wicked cometh in his stead.

9 A <sup>m</sup> hypocrite with his mouth destroyeth his neighbour : but through knowledge shall the just be delivered.

10 <sup>a</sup> When it goeth well with the righteous, the city rejoiceth : and when the wicked perish, there is shouting.

11 <sup>o</sup> By the blessing of the upright the city is exalted : but it is overthrown by the mouth of the wicked.

12 <sup>p</sup> He that is void of wisdom despiseth his neighbour : but a man of understanding

termination of his ills. But hope was not made for the wicked ; and yet they are the very persons that most abound in it ! They hope to be saved, and get at last to the kingdom of God ; though they have their face towards perdition, and refuse to turn. But their hope goes no farther than the grave. There the wicked man's expectation is cut off, and his hope perishes. But to the saint, the penitent, and the cross-bearers in general, what a treasure is hope ! What a balm through life !

Verse 8. The wicked cometh in his stead.] Often God makes this distinction ; in public calamities and in sudden accidents he rescues the righteous, and leaves the wicked, who has filled up the measure of his iniquities, to be seized by the hand of death. Justice, then, does its own work ; for mercy has been rejected.

Verse 9. A hypocrite with his mouth] חנף chaneph might be better translated infidel than hypocrite. The latter is one that pretends to religion ; that uses it for secular purposes. The former is one who disbelieves Divine revelation, and accordingly is polluted, and lives in pollution. This is properly the force of the original word. Such persons deal in calumny and lies, and often thus destroy the character of their neighbour. Besides, they are very zealous in propagating their own infidel notions ; and thus, by this means, destroy their neighbour ; but the experimental knowledge which the just have of God and his salvation prevents them from being ensnared.

Verse 10. When it goeth well] An upright, pious, sensible man is a great blessing to the neighbourhood where he resides, by his example, his advice, and his prayers. The considerate prize him on these accounts, and rejoice in his prosperity. But when the wicked perish, who has been a general curse by the contagion of his example and conversation, there is not only no regret expressed for his decease, but a general joy because God has removed him.

Verse 12. He that is void of wisdom] A foolish man is generally abundant in his censures ; he dwells on the defects of his neighbour, and is sure to bring them into the most prominent view. But a man of understanding—a prudent, sensible man, hides those defects wherever he can, and puts the most charitable construction on those which he cannot conceal.

Verse 13. A talebearer] הוֹלֵךְ רַחֵל holech rachul, the walking busybody, the trader in scandal.

Revealeth secrets] Whatever was confided to him he is sure to publish abroad. The word means a hawker, or travelling chapman. Such are always great newsmongers ; and will tell even their own secrets, rather than have nothing to say.

Verse 15. He that is surety for a stranger shall smart for it] He shall find evil upon evil in it. See on chap. vi. 1.

Verse 16. A gracious woman retaineth honor] Instead of this clause, the Septuagint have, ἡ γυνὴ εὐχαριστος εὐεργετῇ ἀνδρὶ δοῦσαν, "A gracious woman raiseth up honour to the man ;" ὁποῦς δὲ ἀτιμὰς γυνὴ μισοῦσα δίκαια, "But she that hateth righteous things is a throne of dishonour." A good wife is an honour to her husband ; and a bad wife is her husband's reproach : if this be so, how careful should a man be whom he marries !

Verse 17. The merciful man doeth good to his own soul] Every gracious disposition is increased while a man is exercised in showing mercy. No man can show an act of disinterested mercy without benefiting his own soul, by improving his moral feeling.

But he that is cruel troubleth his own flesh.] We seldom see a peevish, fretful, vindictive man either in good health, or good plight of body. I have often heard it observed of such, "He frets his flesh off his bones."

Verse 18. Worketh a deceitful work] An unstable work ; nothing is durable that he does, except his crimes.

Verse 19. Righteousness tendeth to life] True godliness promotes health, and is the best means of lengthening out life; but wicked men live not out half their days.

Verse 21. Though hand join in hand] Let them confederate as they please, to support each other, justice will take care that they escape not punishment. The Hindoos sometimes ratify an engagement by one person laying his right hand on the hand of another.—WARD.

Verse 22. A jewel of gold in a swine's snout] That is, beauty in a woman destitute of good breeding and modest carriage, is as becoming as a gold ring on the snout of a swine. Coverdale translates thus: "A fayre woman without discrete maners, is like a ringe of golde in a swyne's snoute." In Asiatic countries the nose jewel is very common: to this the text alludes.

Verse 24. There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth] The bountiful man, who gives to the poor, never turning away his face from any one in distress, the Lord blesses his property, and the bread is multiplied in his hand. To the same purpose the following verse.

Verse 25. The liberal soul shall be made fat] He who gives to the distressed, in the true spirit of charity, shall get a hundred fold from God's mercy. How wonderful is the Lord! He gives the property, gives the heart to use it aright, and recompenses the man for the deed, though all the fruit was found from himself!

He that watereth] A man who distributes in the right spirit gets more good himself than the poor man does who receives the bounty. Thus it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Verse 26. He that withholdeth corn] Who refuses to sell because he hopes for a dearth, and then he can make his own price.

The people shall curse him] Yes, and God shall curse him also; and if he do not return and repent, he will get God's curse, and the curse of the poor, which will be a canker in his money during time, and in his soul throughout eternity.

Verse 29. Shall inherit the wind] He who dissipates his property by riotous living, shall be as unsatisfied as he who attempts to feed upon air.

Verse 30. The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life] עץ חיים els chayim, "the tree of lives." It is like that tree which grew in the paradise of God; increasing the bodily and mental vigour of those who ate of it.

He that winneth souls is wise] Wisdom seeks to reclaim the wanderers; and he who is influenced by wisdom will do the same.

Verse 31. Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, &c.] The Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic read this verse as follows: "And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear!" And this St. Peter quotes literatim, 1st Epist. iv. 18, where see the note.

NOTES ON CHAP. XII.

Verse 1. Whoso loveth instruction] מוסר musar, discipline or correction, loves knowledge ; for correction is the way to knowledge.

But he that hateth reproof is brutish.] בער baar, he is a bear ; and expects no more benefit from correction than the ox does from the good.

Verse 2. A good man obtaineth favour] First, it is God who makes him good ; for every child of Adam is bad till the grace of God changes his heart. Secondly, while he walks in the path of obedience he increases in goodness, and consequently in the favour of the Lord.

Verse 3. A man shall not be established by wickedness] Evil is always variable : it has no fixed principle, except the root that is in the human heart ; and even that is ever assuming new forms. Nothing is permanent but goodness ; and that is unchangeable, because it comes from God. The produce of goodness is permanent, because it has God's blessing in it : the fruit of wickedness, or the property procured by wickedness, is transitory, because it has God's curse in it. The righteous has his root in God ; and therefore he shall not be moved.

Verse 4. A virtuous woman is a crown to her husband] עשת חיל esheth chayil, a strong woman. Our word virtue (virtus) is derived from vir, a man ; and as man is the noblest of God's creatures, virtue expresses what is becoming to man ; what is noble, courageous, and dignified : and as vir, a man, comes from vis, power or strength ; so it implies what is strong and vigorous in principle : and as in uncivilized life strength and courage were considered the very highest, because apparently the most necessary, of all virtues ; hence the term itself might have become the denomination of all excellent moral qualities ; and is now applied to whatever constitutes the system of morality and moral duties. In some parts of the world, however, where arts and sciences have made little progress, strength is one of the first qualifications of a wife, where the labours of the field are appointed to them. It is not an uncommon sight in different parts of Africa, to see the wives (queens) of the kings and chiefs going out in the morning to the plantations, with their mattock in their hand, and their youngest child on their back ; and when arrived at the ground, lay the young prince or princess upon the earth, which when weary of lying on one side, will roll itself on the other, and thus continue during the course of the day, without uttering a single whimper, except at the intervals in which its mother gives it suck ; she being employed all the while in such labour as we in Europe generally assign to our horses. In these eases, the strong wife is the highest acquisition ; and is a crown to her husband, though he be king of Bonny or Calabar. It is certain that in ancient times the women in Judea did some of the severest work in the fields, such as drawing water from the wells, and watering the flocks, &c. On this account, I think, the words may be taken literally, and especially when we add another consideration, that a woman healthy, and of good muscular powers, is the most likely to produce and properly rear up a healthy offspring ; and children of this kind are a crown to their parents.

Is as rottenness in his bones.] Does not this refer to a woman irregular in her manners, who by her incontinence not only maketh her husband ashamed, but contracts and communicates such diseases as bring rottenness into the bones ? I think so. And I think this was the view taken of the text by Coverdale, who translates thus : " A stedfast woman is a crowne unto her hussbonde : but she that behaveth herself unholently is a corruption in his bones."

Verse 7. The wicked are overthrown] Seldom does God give such a long life or numerous offspring.

But the house of the righteous shall stand.] God blesses their progeny, and their families continue long in the earth ; whereas the wicked seldom have many generations in a direct line. This is God's mercy, that the entail of iniquity may be in some sort cut off, so that the same vices may not be strengthened by successive generations. For generally the bad root produces not only a bad plant, but one worse than itself.

Verse 9. He that is despised, and hath a servant] I believe the Vulgate gives the true sense of this verse : Melior est pauper, et sufficiens sibi ; quam gloriosus, et indigens pane. " Better is the poor man who provides for himself, than the proud who is destitute of bread." The versions in general agree in this sense. This needs no comment. There are some who, through pride of birth, &c., would rather starve, than put their hands to menial labour. Though they may be lords, how much to be preferred is the simple peasant, who supports himself and family by the drudgery of life!

Verse 10. A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast] One principal characteristic of a holy man is mercy: cruelty is unknown to him; and his benevolence extends to the meanest of the brute creation. Pity rules the heart of a pious man; he can do nothing that is cruel. He considers what is best for the comfort, ease, health, and life of the beast that serves him; and he knows that God himself careth for oxen: and one of the ten commandments provides a seventh part of time to be allotted for the rest of labouring beasts as well as for man.

I once in my travels met with the Hebrew of this clause on the sign board of a public inn יורע צדיק נפש יודע tsaddik nefesh behemto. "A righteous man considereth the life of his beast;" which, being very appropriate, reminded me that I should feed my horse.

The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel.] אכזרי achzari, are violent, without mercy, ruthless. The wicked, influenced by Satan, can show no other disposition than what is in their master. If they appear at any time merciful, it is a cloak which they use to cover purposes of cruelty. To accomplish its end, iniquity will assume any garb, speak mercifully, extol benevolence, sometimes even give to the poor! But, timeo Danaos, et dona ferentes. The cry of fire at mid-night, provided it be in another's dwelling, is more congenial to their souls than the cry of mercy. Look at the human fiends, "out-heroding Herod," in horse races, bruising matches, and cock fights, and in wars for the extension of territory, and the purposes of ambition. The hell is yet undescribed, that is suited to such monsters in cruelty.

Verse 11. He that tilleth his land] God's blessing will be in the labour of the honest agriculturist.

14<sup>t</sup> A man shall be satisfied with good by the fruit of his mouth: <sup>u</sup> and the recompense of a man's hands shall be rendered unto him.

15<sup>v</sup> The way of the fool is right in his own eyes: but he that hearkeneth unto counsel is wise.

17<sup>y</sup> He that speaketh truth sheweth forth righteousness: but a false witness deceit.

But he that followeth vain persons] He who, while he should be cultivating his ground, preparing for a future crop, or reaping his harvest, associates with fowlers, coursers of hares, hunters of foxes, or those engaged in any champaign amusements, is void of understanding; and I have known several such come to beggary.

To this verse the Septuagint add the following clause: Ὅς ἐστιν ἰδὼς ἐν οἶκῳ διατριβῆς, ἐν τοῖς ἐαυτοῦ οὐκ ὀφθαλμοῖς καταλείπει ἀτιμίαν. "He who is a boon companion in banquets, shall leave dishonour in his own fortresses." This has been copied by the Vulgate and the Arabic. That is, The man who frequents the ale-house cariches that, while he impoverishes his own habitation.

Verse 12. The wicked desireth the net of evil men] They applaud their ways, and are careful to imitate them in their wiles.

Verse 13. The wicked is snared by the transgression of his lips] A man who deals in lies and false oaths will sooner or later be found out to his own ruin. There is another proverb as true as this: A liar had need of a good memory; for as the truth is not in him, he says and unsays, and often contradicts himself.

Verse 16. A fool's wrath is presently known] We have a proverb very like this, and it will serve for illustration:—

A fool's bolt is soon shot.

A weak-minded man has no self-government; he is easily angered, and generally speaks whatever comes first to his mind.

Verse 18. There is that speaketh] Instead of בוטה boteh, blabbing out, blustering, several MSS. have בוטח boteach, TRUSTING: and instead of כמדקרות kemadkeroth, as the piercings, seven MSS., with the Complutensian Polyglot, have כמדקרות bemadkeroth, in the piercings. "There is that trusteth in the piercings of a sword: but the tongue of the wise is health." But I suppose the former to be the true reading.

NOTES ON CHAP. XIII.

Verse 1. A wise son heareth his father's instruction] The child that has had a proper nurturing, will profit by his father's counsels; but the child that is permitted to fulfil its own will and have its own way, will jest at the reproofs of its parents.

Verse 3. He that keepeth his mouth keepeth his life] How often have the foolish, headstrong, and wicked, forfeited their lives by the treasonable or blasphemous words they have spoken! The government of the tongue is a rare but useful talent.

But he that openeth wide his lips] He that puts no bounds to his loquacity, speaks on every subject, and gives his judgment and opinion on every matter. It has often been remarked that God has given us two EYES, that we may SEE much; two EARS, that we may HEAR much; but has given us but ONE tongue, and that fenced in with teeth, to indicate that though we hear and see much, we should speak but little.

Verse 4. The soul of the sluggard desireth, and hath nothing] We often hear many religious people expressing a desire to have more of the Divine life, and yet never get forward in it. How is this! The reason is, they desire, but do not stir themselves up to lay hold upon the Lord. They are always learning, but never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. They seek to enter in at the strait gate, but are not able, because they do not strive.

Verse 7. There is that maketh himself rich] That labours hard to acquire money, yet hath nothing; his excessive covetousness not being satisfied with what he possesses, nor permitting him to enjoy with comfort what he has acquired. The fable of the dog in the manger will illustrate this.

There is that maketh himself poor, yet hath great riches.] "As poor," said St. Paul, "yet making many rich; as having nothing, yet possessing all things." The former is the rich poor man; the latter is the poor rich man.

wicked man is loathsome, and cometh to shame.

6 <sup>e</sup> Righteousness keepeth him that is upright in the way: but wickedness overthroweth <sup>f</sup> the sinner.

7 <sup>g</sup> There is that maketh himself rich, yet hath nothing: there is that maketh himself poor, yet hath great riches.

8 The ransom of a man's life are his riches: but the poor heareth not rebuke.

As the words are here in the hithpael conjugation, which implies reflex action, or the action performed on one's self, and often signifies feigning or pretending to be what one is not, or not to be what one is; the words may be understood of persons who feign or pretend to be either richer or poorer than they really are, to accomplish some particular purpose. "There is that feigneth himself to be rich, yet hath nothing; there is that feigneth himself to be poor, yet hath great riches." Both these characters frequently occur in life.

Verse 8. The ransom of a man's life] Those who have riches have often much trouble with them; as they had much trouble to get them, so they have much trouble to keep them. In despotic countries, a rich man is often accused of some capital crime, and to save his life, though he may be quite innocent, is obliged to give up his riches; but the poor, in such countries, are put to no trouble.

Verse 9. The light of the righteous rejoiceth] They shall have that measure of prosperity which shall be best for them; but the wicked, howsoever prosperous for a time, shall be brought into desolation. Light and lamp in both cases may signify posterity. The righteous shall have a joyous posterity; but that of the wicked shall be cut off. So 1 Kings xi. 36: "And unto his son will I give one tribe, that David my servant may have a light (נֶר, a lamp) always before me." xv. 4: "Nevertheless for David's sake did the Lord give them a lamp, to set up his son after him." See also Psa. cxxii. 17, and several other places.

Verse 10. By pride cometh contention] Perhaps there is not a quarrel among individuals in private life, nor a war among nations, that does not proceed from pride and ambition. Neither man nor nation will be content to be less than another; and to acquire the wished-for superiority all is thrown into general confusion, both in public and private life. It was to destroy this spirit of pride, that Jesus was manifested in the extreme of humility and humiliation among men.

The salvation of Christ is a deliverance from pride, and a being clothed with humility. As far as we are humble, so far we are saved.

Verse 11. Wealth gotten by vanity] Wealth that is not the result of honest industry and hard labour is seldom permanent. All fortunes acquired by speculation, lucky hits, and ministering to the pride or luxury of others, &c., soon become dissipated. They are not gotten in the way of Providence, and have not God's blessing, and therefore are not permanent.

Verse 12. Hope deferred maketh the heart sick] When once a good is discovered, want of it felt, strong desire for the possession excited, and the promise of attainment made on grounds unsuspected, so that the reality of the thing and the certainly of the promise are manifest, hope posts forward to realize the blessing. Delay in the gratification pains the mind; the increase of the delay prostrates and sickens the heart; and if delay sickens the heart, ultimate disappointment kills it. But when the thing desired, hoped for, and expected comes, it is a tree of life, עץ חיים ets chaiyim, "the tree of lives;" it comforts and invigorates both body and soul. To the tree of lives, in the midst of the gardens of paradise, how frequent are the allusions in the writings of Solomon, and in other parts of the Holy Scriptures! What deep, and perhaps yet unknown, mysteries were in this tree!

Verse 13. Whoso despiseth the word] The revelation which God has in his mercy given to man—shall be destroyed; for there is no other way of salvation but that which it points out.

But he that feareth the commandment] That respects it so as to obey it, walking as this revelation directs—shall be rewarded; shall find it to be his highest interest, and shall be in peace or safety, as the Hebrew word שָׁלוֹם may be translated.

Verse 14. The law of the wise is a fountain of life] Perhaps it would be better to translate, "The law is chief: but 'a "faithful ambassador is health.

18 Poverty and shame shall be to him that refuseth instruction : but <sup>v</sup> he that regardeth reproof shall be honoured.

to the wise man a fountain of life." It is the same to him as the "vein of lives," מֵקוֹר חַיִּים mekor chaiyim, the great aorta which transmits the blood from the heart to every part of the body. There seems to be here an allusion to the garden of paradise, to the tree of lives, to the templer, to the baleful issue of that temptation, and to the death entailed on man by his unwisely breaking the law of his God.

Verse 15. The way of transgressors is hard.] Never was a truer saying; most sinners have more pain and difficulty to get their souls damned, than the righteous have, with all their cross-bearings, to get to the kingdom of heaven.

Verse 17. A wicked messenger] The Septuagint: Βασιλεὺς θρασεύς, a bold king; instead of מַלְאֲכַל malach, a messenger, they had read מֶלֶךְ melech, a king: but they are singular in this rendering; none of the other versions have it so. He that betrays the counsels of his government, or the interests of his country, will sooner or later fall into mischief; but he that faithfully and loyally fulfils his mission, shall produce honour and safety to the commonwealth.

Verse 19. The desire accomplished] See on ver. 12.

Verse 20. He that walketh with wise men shall be wise] To walk with a person implies love and attachment; and it is impossible not to imitate those we love. So we say, "Show me his company, and I'll tell you the man." Let me know the company he keeps, and I shall easily guess his moral character.

Verse 22. A good man leaveth an inheritance] He files many a prayer in heaven in their behalf, and his good example and advices are remembered and quoted from generation to generation. Besides, whatever property he left was honestly acquired, and well-gotten goods are permanent. The general experience of men shows this to be a common case; and that property ill-gotten seldom reaches to the third generation. This even the heathens observed. Hence:

"The third generation shall not possess the goods that have been unjustly acquired."

Verse 23. That is destroyed for want of judgment.] O, how much of the poverty of the poor arises from their own want of management! They have little or no economy, and no foresight. When they get any thing, they speedily spend it; and a feast and a famine make the chief varieties of their life.

Verse 24. He that spareth his rod hateth his son] That is, if he hated him, he could not do him a greater disservice than not to correct him when his obstinacy or disobedience requires it. We have met with this subject already, and it is a favourite with Solomon. See the places referred to in the margin.

The Rev. Mr. Holden makes some sensible observations on this passage : "By the neglect of early correction the desires (passions) obtain ascendancy ; the temper becomes irascible, peevish, querulous. Pride is nourished, humility destroyed, and by the habit of indulgence the mind is incapacitated to bear with firmness and equanimity the cares and sorrows, the checks and disappointments, which flesh is heir to."

Verse 25. To the satisfying of his soul] His desires are all moderate ; he is contented with his circumstances, and is pleased with the lot which God is pleased to send. The wicked, though he use all shifts and expedients to acquire earthly good, not sticking even at rapine and wrong, is frequently in real want, and always dissatisfied with his portion. A contented mind is a continual feast. At such feasts he eats not.

NOTES ON CHAP. XIV.

Verse 1. Every wise woman buildeth her house] By her prudent and industrious management she increases property in the family, furniture in the house, and food and raiment for her household. This is the true building of a house. The thrifless wife acts differently, and the opposite is the result. Household furniture, far from being increased, is dilapidated; and her household are ill-fed, ill-clothed, and worse educated.

Verse 3. The mouth of the foolish is a rod of pride] The reproofs of such a person are ill-judged and ill-timed, and generally are conveyed in such language as renders them not only ineffectual, but displeasing, and even irritating.

Verse 4. But much increase is by the strength of the ox.] The ox is the most profitable of all the beasts used in husbandry. Except merely for speed, he is almost in every respect superior to the horse. 1. He is longer lived. 2. Scarcely liable to any diseases. 3. He is steady, and always pulls fair in his gears.

6. — <sup>e</sup> Exod. xx. 16 ; xxiii. 1 ; chap. vi. 19 ; xii. 17 ; ver. 25.

4. He lives, fattens, and maintains his strength on what a horse will not eat, and therefore is supported on one third of the cost. 5. His manure is more profitable. And, 6. When he is worn out in his labour, his flesh is good for the nourishment of man, his horns of great utility, and his hide almost invaluable. It might be added, he is little or no expense in shoeing, and his gears are much more simple, and much less expensive, than those of the horse. In all large farms oxen are greatly to be preferred to horses. Have but patience with this most patient animal, and you will soon find that there is much increase by the strength and labour of the ox.

Verse 6. A scorner seeketh wisdom] I believe the scorner means, in this book, the man that despises the counsel of God ; the infidel. Such may seek wisdom ; but he never can find it, because he does not seek it where it is to be found ; neither in the teaching of God's Spirit, nor in the revelation of his will.

Verse 7. When thou perceivest not—the lips of knowledge.] Instead of דעת daath, knowledge, several MSS. have שקר sheker, a lie. How this reading came I cannot conjecture. The meaning of the adage is plain: Never associate with a vain, empty fellow, when thou perceivest he can neither convey nor receive instruction.

Verse 8. Is to understand his way] Instead of הבין habin, to understand, הבין hachin, to DIRECT his way, is found in one MS. It makes a very good sense.

Verse 9. Fools make a mock at sin] And only fools would do so. But he that makes a sport of sinning, will find it no sport to suffer the vengeance of an eternal fire. Some learned men by their criticisms have brought this verse into embarrassments, out of which they were not able to extricate it. I believe we shall not come much nearer the sense than our present version does.

Verse 10. The heart knoweth his own bitterness] מרת נפשו morraath naphsho, “The bitterness of its soul.” Under spiritual sorrow, the heart feels, the soul feels; all the animal nature feels and suffers. But when the peace of God is spoken to the troubled soul, the joy is indescribable; the whole man partakes of it. And a stranger to these religious feelings, to the travail of the soul, and to the witness of the Spirit, does not intermeddle with them; he does not understand them: indeed they may be even foolishness to him, because they are spiritually discerned.

Verse 12. There is a way which seemeth right unto a man] This may be his easily besetting sin, the sin of his constitution, the sin of his trade. Or it may be his own false views of religion: he may have an imperfect repentance, a false faith, a very false creed; and he may persuade himself that he is in the direct way to heaven. Many of the papists, when they were burning the saints of God in the flames at Smithfield, thought they were doing God service! And in the late Irish massacre, the more of the Protestants they picked to death, shot, or burnt, the more they believed they deserved of God’s favour and their Church’s gratitude. But cruelty and murder are the short road, the near way, to eternal perdition.

Verse 13. Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful] Many a time is a smile forced upon the face, when thrown: but the tabernacle of the upright shall flourish.

12 <sup>k</sup>There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the <sup>l</sup>end thereof are the ways of death.

13 Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful; and <sup>m</sup>the end of that mirth is heaviness.

the heart is in deep distress. And it is a hard task to put on the face of mirth, when a man has a heavy heart.

Verse 14. The backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways] 1. Who is the backslider? חטו sug. 1. The man who once walked in the ways of religion, but has withdrawn from them. 2. The man who once fought manfully against the world, the devil, and the flesh; but has retreated from the battle, or joined the enemy. 3. The man who once belonged to the congregation of the saints, but is now removed from them, and is set down in the synagogue of Satan.

2. But who is the backslider in HEART? 1. Not he who was surprised and overcome by the power of temptation, and the weakness of his own heart. 2. But he who drinks down iniquity with greediness. 3. Who gives cheerful way to the bent of his own nature, and now delights in fulfilling the lusts of the flesh and of the mind. 4. Who loves sin as before he loved godliness.

3. What are his own ways? Folly, sin, disappointment, and death; with the apprehension of the wrath of God, and the sharp twings of a guilty conscience.

4. What is implied in being filled with his own ways? Having his soul saturated with folly, sin, and disappointment. At last ending here below in death, and then commencing an eternal existence where the fire is not quenched, and under the influence of that worm that never dieth. Alas, alas! who may abide when God doeth this?

And a good man shall be satisfied from himself.]

1. Who is the good man? איש טוב ish tob. 1. The man whose heart is right with God, whose tongue corresponds to his heart, and whose actions correspond to both. 2. The man who is every thing that the sinner and backslider are not.

2. He shall be satisfied from himself—he shall have the testimony of his own conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, he has his conversation among men.

22 Do they not err that devise evil ? but

° Chap. xxii. 3.—° Chap. xix. 7.—° Heb. many are the lovers

God in his conscience, and the testimony of God in his Bible, show him that he belongs to the heavenly family. It is not from creeds or confessions of faith that he derives his satisfaction : he gets it from heaven, and it is sealed upon his heart.

Verse 16. A wise man feareth] He can never trust in himself, though he be satisfied from himself. He knows that his sufficiency is of God ; and he has that fear that causes him to depart from evil, which is a guardian to the love he feels. Love renders him cautious ; the other makes him confident. His caution leads him from sin ; his confidence leads him to God.

Verse 17. He that is soon angry] כצר אפיס ket-sar appayim, "short of nostrils:" because, when a man is angry, his nose is contracted, and drawn up towards his eyes.

Dealeth foolishly] He has no time for reflection ; he is hurried on by his passions, speaks like a fool, and acts like a madman.

Verse 19. The evil bow before the good] They are almost constrained to show them respect ; and the wicked, who have wasted their substance with riotous living, bow before the gates of the righteous—of benevolent men—begging a morsel of bread.

Verse 20. But the rich hath many friends.] Many who speak to him the language of friendship ; but if they profess friendship because he is rich, there is not one real friend among them. There is a fine saying of Cicero on this subject : Ut hirundines festivo tempore præsto sunt, frigore pulsæ recedunt : ita falsi amici sereno tempore præsto sunt : simul atque fortunæ hiemem viderint, evolant omnes.—Lib. iv., ad Herenn. "They are like swallows, who fly off during the winter, and quit our cold climates ; and do not return till the warm season : but as soon as the winter sets in, they are all off again." So Horace :—

Donec eris felix, multos numerabis amicos :
Nullus ad amissas ibit amicus opes.

"As long as thou art prosperous, thou shalt have many friends : but who of them will regard thee when thou hast lost thy wealth ?"

mercy and truth shall be to them that devise good.

23 In all labour there is profit : but the talk of the lips tendeth only to penury.

24 The crown of the wise is their riches : but the foolishness of fools is folly.

25 ° A true witness delivereth souls : but a deceitful witness speaketh lies.

26 In the fear of the LORD is strong confidence ; and his children shall have a place of refuge.

27 ° The fear of the LORD is a fountain of life, to depart from the snares of death.

28 In the multitude of people is the king's of the rich.—° Psa. xli. 1 ; cxii. 9.—° Ver. 5.—° Ch. xiii. 14.

Verse 21. He that despiseth his neighbour sinneth] To despise a man because he has some natural blemish is unjust, cruel, and wicked. He is not the author of his own imperfections ; they did not occur through his fault or folly ; and if he could, he would not retain them. It is, therefore, unjust and wicked to despise him for what is not his fault, but his misfortune.

But he that hath mercy on the poor] Who reproaches no man for his poverty or scanty intellect, but divides his bread with the hungry—happy is he ; the blessing of God, and of them that were ready to perish, shall come upon him.

Verse 23. In all labour there is profit] If a man work at his trade, he gains by it ; if he cultivate the earth, it will yield an increase ; and in proportion as he labours, so will be his profit : but he who talks much labours little. And a man of words is seldom a man of deeds. Less talk and more work, is one of our own ancient advices.

Verse 24. But the foolishness of fools is folly.] The Targum reads, The honour of fools is folly. The fool, from his foolishness, produces acts of folly. This appears to be the meaning.

Verse 26. In the fear of the Lord is strong confidence] From this, and from genuine Christian experience, we find that the fear of God is highly consistent with the strongest confidence in his mercy and goodness.

Verse 27. The fear of the Lord is a fountain of life] מֶקוֹר חַיִּים mekor chayim, the vein of lives. Another allusion to the great aorta which carries the blood from the heart to all the extremities of the body. Of this phrase, and the tree of lives, Solomon is particularly fond. See on chap. iv. 23 ; x. 12.

Verse 28. In the multitude of people] It is the interest of every state to promote marriage by every means that is just and prudent ; and to discourage, disgrace, and debase celibacy ; to render bachelors incapable, after a given age, of all public employments : and to banish nunneries and monasteries from all parts of their dominions ;—they have ever, from their invention, contributed more to vice than virtue ; and are positively point blank against the law of God.

29 <sup>u</sup> He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding : but he that is <sup>v</sup> hasty of spirit exalteth folly.

30 A sound heart is the life of the flesh : but <sup>w</sup> envy <sup>x</sup> the rottenness of the bones.

Verse 29. That is hasty of spirit] קצר רוח ketsar ruach, "the short of spirit;" one that is easily irritated ; and, being in a passion, he is agitated so as to be literally short of breath. Here put in opposition to ארך אפים erech oppayim, long of nostrils; see on ver. 17 ; and of the same import with St. Paul's μακροθυμία, longsuffering, longmindedness. See on Eph. iv. 2.

Verse 30. A sound heart is the life of the flesh] A healthy state of the blood, and a proper circulation of that stream of life, is the grand cause, in the hand of God, of health and longevity. If the heart be diseased, life cannot be long continued.

Verse 31. He that oppresseth the poor reproacheth his Maker] Because the poor, or comparatively poor, are, in the order of God, a part of the inhabitants of the earth; and every man who loves God will show mercy to the poor, for with this God is peculiarly delighted. The poor have we ever with us, for the excitement and exercise of those benevolent, compassionate, and merciful feelings, without which men had been but little better than brutes.

Verse 32. The wicked is driven away in his wickedness] He does not leave life cheerfully. Poor soul ! Thou hast no hope in the other world, and thou leavest the present with the utmost regret ! Thou wilt not go off ; but God will drive thee.

But the righteous hath hope in his death.] He rejoiceth to depart and be with Christ : to him death is gain ; he is not reluctant to go—he flies at the call of God.

Verse 34. But sin is a reproach to any people.] I am satisfied this is not the sense of the original, וחסר לאמים vechesed leummim chattath ; which would be better rendered, And mercy is a sin-offering for the people. The Vulgate has, Miscros autem facit populos peccatum, "sin makes the people wretched." Ελασσο- νομισι δε ψυχας ἁμαρτιαι ; "But sins lessen the tribes."—Septuagint. So also the Syriac and Arabic. The plain meaning of the original seems to be, A national disposition to mercy appears in the sight of God as a continual sin-offering. Not that it atones for the sin of the people ; but, as a sin-offering is pleasing in the sight of the God of mercy, so is a merciful disposition in a nation. This view of the verse is consistent with the purest doctrines of free grace. And what is the true sense of the words, we should take at all hazards and consequences : we shall never trench upon a sound creed by a literal interpretation of God's words. No nation has more of this spirit than the British nation. It is true, we have too many  sanguinary laws ; but the spirit of the people is widely different.

If any one will contend for the common version, he has my consent ; and I readily agree in the saying, Sin is the reproach of any people. It is the curse and scandal of man. Though I think what I have given is the true meaning of the text.

Verse 35. The king's favour is toward a wise servant] The king should have an intelligent man for his minister ; a man of deep sense, sound judgment, and of a feeling, merciful disposition. He who has not the former will plunge the nation into difficulties ; and he who has not the latter will embark her in disastrous wars. Most wars are occasioned by bad ministers, men of blood, who cannot be happy but in endeavouring to unchain the spirit of discord. Let every humane heart pray, Lord, scatter thou the people who delight in war ! Amen—so be it. Selah !

NOTES ON CHAP. XV.

Verse 1. A soft answer] Gentleness will often disarm the most furious, where positive derangement has not taken place ; one angry word will always beget another, for the disposition of one spirit always begets its own likeness in another : thus kindness produces kindness, and rage produces rage. Universal experience confirms this proverb.

Verse 2. Useth knowledge aright] This is very difficult to know : — when to speak, and when to be si- lent ; what to speak, and what to leave unspoken ; the manner that is best and most suitable to the occasion, the subject, the circumstances, and the persons. All these are difficulties, often even to the wisest men.
Even wise counsel may be foolishly given.

Verse 3. The eyes of the Lord are in every place] He not only sees all things, by his omnipresence, but his providence is everywhere. And if the consideration that his eye is in every place, have a tendency to appal those whose hearts are not right before him, and who seek for privacy that they may commit ini- quity ; yet the other consideration, that his providence is everywhere, has a great tendency to encourage the upright, and all who may be in perilous or distressing circumstances.

Verse 4. A wholesome tongue is a tree of life] Here again is an allusion to the paradisiacal tree, עץ חיים cts chayyim, "the tree of lives."

Verse 8. The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomi- nation] Even the most sedulous attendance on the ordinances of God, and performance of the ceremonies of religion, is an abomination to the Lord, if the heart be not right with him, and the observance do not flow from a principle of pure devotion. No religious acts will do in place of holiness to the Lord.

The prayer of the upright is his delight.] What a motive to be upright ; and what a motive to the up- right to pray ! But who is the upright ? The man who is weary of sin, and sincerely desires the salvation of God ; as well as he who has already received a measure of that salvation. Hence it is said in the next verse, "He loveth him that followeth after righteousness."

Verse 11. Hell and destruction] שְׁאוֹל וַחֲבַדּוֹן sheol vaabaddon. Hades, the invisible world, the place of separate spirits till the resurrection ; and Abaddon, the place of torment ; are ever under the eye and control of the Lord.

Verse 13. By sorrow of the heart the spirit is bro- ken.] Every kind of sorrow worketh death, but that which is the offspring of true repentance. This alone is healthful to the soul. The indulgence of a disposition to sighing tends to destroy life. Every deep sigh throws off a portion of the vital energy.

Verse 16. Better is little with the fear of the Lord] Because where the fear of God is, there are moderation and contentment of spirit.

Verse 17. Better is a dinner of herbs] Great numbers of indigent Hindoos subsist wholly on herbs, fried in oil, and mixed with their rice.

Verse 19. The way of the slothful man is as a hedge of thorns] Because he is slothful, he imagines ten thousand difficulties in the way which cannot be surmounted ; but they are all the creatures of his own imagination, and that imagination is formed by his sloth.

Verse 22. But in the multitude of counsellors] See note on chap. xi. 14. But רֹב יִצְעִים rob yaalsim might be translated, chief or master of the council, the prime minister.

Verse 24. The way of life is above to the wise] There is a treble antithesis here : 1. The way of the wise, and that of the fool. 2. The one is above, the other below. 3. The one is of life, the other is of death.

Verse 25. The house of the proud] Families of this description are seldom continued long. The Lord hates pride ; and those that will not be humble he will destroy.

Verse 27. He that is greedy of gain] He who will be rich ; troubleth his own house—he is a torment to himself and his family by his avariciousness and penury, and a curse to those with whom he deals.

But he that hateth gifts] Whatever is given to pervert judgment.

Verse 28. The heart of the righteous studieth to answer] His tongue never runs before his wit ; he never speaks rashly, and never unadvisedly ; because he studies—ponders, his thoughts and his words.

Verse 29. The Lord is far from the wicked] He is neither near to hear, nor near to help.

26 <sup>k</sup> The thoughts of the wicked are an abomination to the LORD : <sup>l</sup> but the words of the pure are <sup>m</sup> pleasant words.

27 <sup>n</sup> He that is greedy of gain troubleth his own house : but he that hateth gifts shall live.

28 The heart of the righteous <sup>o</sup> studieth to answer : but the mouth of the wicked poureth out evil things.

29 <sup>p</sup> The LORD is far from the wicked : but <sup>q</sup> he heareth the prayer of the righteous.

30 The light of the eyes rejoiceth the heart : and a good report maketh the bones fat.

31 <sup>r</sup> The ear that heareth the reproof of life abideth among the wise.

32 He that refuseth <sup>s</sup> instruction despiseth his own soul : but he that <sup>t</sup> heareth reproof <sup>u</sup> getteth understanding.

Verse 30. The light of the eyes rejoiceth the heart] Nature and art are continually placing before our view a multitude of the most resplendent images, each of which is calculated to give pleasure. The man who has a correct judgment, and an accurate eye, may not only amuse, but instruct himself endlessly, by the beauties of nature and art.

Verse 31. The ear that heareth the reproof] That receives it gratefully and obeys it. “Advice is for them that will take it ;” so says one of our own old proverbs ; and the meaning here is nearly the same.

Verse 32. Despiseth his own soul] That is, constructively ; for if the instruction lead to the preservation of life and soul, he that neglects or despises it throws all as much in the way of danger as if he actually hated himself.

Verse 33. The fear of the Lord] See note on chap. i. 7. Much is spoken concerning this fear ; 1. It is the beginning of wisdom. 2. It is also the beginning of knowledge. And, 3. It is the instruction of wisdom. Wisdom derives its most important lessons from the fear of God. He who fears God much, is well taught.

And before honour is humility.] That is, few persons ever arrive at honour who are not humble ; and those who from low life have risen to places of trust and confidence, have been remarkable for humility. We may rest assured that the providence of God will never elevate a proud man ; such God beholds afar off. He may get into places of trust and profit, but God will oust him, and the people will curse him, and curse his memory. So will it ever be with bad ministers and advisers of the crown.

Man prepares, but God governs. God has made all things for himself; he hates pride. The judgments of God. The administration of kings; their justice, anger, and clemency. God has made all in weight, measure, and due proportion. Necessity produces industry. The patient man. The lot is under the direction of the Lord.

NOTES ON CHAP. XVI.

Verse 1. The preparations of the heart in man] The Hebrew is לִבִּי לְאֵדָם מַאֲרֵחֵי לֵב leadam maarehey leb, which is, literally, "To man are the dispositions of the heart; but from the Lord is the answer of the tongue." Man proposes his wishes; but God answers as he thinks proper. The former is the free offspring of the heart of man; the latter, the free volition of God. Man may think as he pleases, and ask as he lists; but God will give, or not give, as he thinks proper. This I believe to be the meaning of this shamefully tortured passage, so often vexed by critics, their doubts, and indecisions. God help them! for they seldom have the faculty of making any subject plainer! The text does not say that the "preparations," rather dispositions or arrangements, מַאֲרֵחֵי maarehey, "of the heart," as well as "the answer of the tongue, is from the Lord;" though it is generally understood so; but it states that the dispositions or schemes of the heart (are) man's; but the answer of the tongue (is) the Lord's. And so the principal versions have understood it.

Hominis est animam preparare; et Domini gubernare linguam.—VULGATE. "It is the part of man to prepare his soul: it is the prerogative of the Lord to govern the tongue." כֵּן בָּרַךְ נָשׁ תַּרְעִימָא דְּלִבָּא וְכֵן יִמְלֵלָא כֵּן בָּרַךְ נָשׁ תַּרְעִימָא דְּלִבָּא וְכֵן יִמְלֵלָא min bar nash taritha delibba; umin yeyla mamla delishana.—CHALDEE. "From the son of man is the counsel of the heart; and from the Lord is the word of the tongue." The SYRIAC is the same. Καρδία ἀνδρός λογίζεται δίκαια, ἵνα ὑπο τὸν Θεὸν διορθωθῇ τὰ διαζημιώματα αὐτοῦ.—SEPTUAGINT. "The heart of man deviseth righteous things, that its goings may be directed by God."

The ARABIC takes great latitude: "All the works of an humble man are clean before the Lord; and the wicked shall perish in an evil day." Ὅσα τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐστὶν ἐργασίαι καθαῖαι ἐνώπιον τοῦ Κυρίου: καὶ οἱ ἄδικοι ἀπολοῦνται ἐν ἡμέρᾳ κακοῦ.—Old MS. Bible.

man; but the answer of the tongue is of the Lord." So that it appears that our first, and all our ancient versions, understood the text in the same way; and this, independently of critical torture, is the genuine meaning of the Hebrew text. That very valuable version published in Italian, at Geneva, fol. 1562, translates thus: Le disposizioni del cuore sono de l'huomo; ma la risposta del la lingua è dal Signore. "The dispositions of the heart are of man; but the answer of the tongue is from the Lord."

The modern European versions, as far as I have seen, are the same. And when the word dispositions, arrangements, schemes, is understood to be the proper meaning of the Hebrew term, as shown above, the sense is perfectly sound; for there may be a thousand schemes and arrangements made in the heart of man, which he may earnestly wish God to bring to full effect, that are neither for his good nor God's glory; and therefore it is his interest that God has the answer in his own power. At the same time, there is no intimation here that man can prepare his own heart to wait upon, or pray unto the Lord; or that from the human heart any thing good can come, without Divine influence; but simply that he may have many schemes and projects which he may beg God to accomplish, that are not of God, but from himself. Hence our own proverb: "Man proposes, but God disposes." I have entered the more particularly into the consideration of this text, because some are very strenuous in the support of our vicious reading, from a supposition that the other defends the heterodox opinion of man's sufficiency to think any thing as of himself. But while they deserve due credit for their orthodox caution, they will see that no such imputation can fairly lie against the plain grammatical translation of the Hebrew text.

Verse 3. Commit thy works unto the Lord] See that what thou doest is commanded; and then begin, continue, and end all in his name. And thy thoughts shall be established—these schemes or arrangements, though formed in the heart, are agreeable to the Divine will, and therefore shall be established. His thoughts—his meditations—are right; and he begins and ends his work in the Lord; and therefore all issues well.

self] He has so framed and executed every part of his creation, that it manifests his wisdom, power, goodness, and truth.

<sup>5</sup> Even the wicked for the day of evil.] וגם רשע ליום ועָה vegām rasha leyom raah. The whole verse is translated by the Chaldee thus: "All the works of the LORD are for those who obey him; and the wicked is reserved for the evil day."

As raah literally signifies to feed, it has been conjectured that the clause might be read, yea, even the wicked he feeds by the day, or daily.

If we take the words as they stand in our present version, they mean no more than what is expressed by the Chaldee and Syriac: and as far as we can learn from their present confused state, by the Septuagint and Arabic, that "the wicked are reserved for the day of punishment." Coverdale has given, as he generally does, a good sense: "The Lord doth all things for his owne sake; yea, and when he kepeth the ungodly for the daye of wrath." He does not make the wicked or ungodly man; but when man has made himself such, even then God bears with him. But if he repent not, when the measure of his iniquity is filled up, he shall fall under the wrath of God his Maker.

Verse 5. Though hand join in hand, he shall not be unpunished.] The day of wrath shall come on the wicked, whatever means he may take to avoid it. See chap. xi. 21.

Verse 6. By mercy and truth iniquity is purged] This may be misunderstood, as if a man, by showing mercy and acting according to truth, could atone for his own iniquity. The Hebrew text is not ambiguous: עָוֹן בְּחַסְדִּי וּבֶאֱמֻנָה bechesed veemieth yechapper avon; "By mercy and truth he shall atone for iniquity." He—God, by his mercy, in sending his son Jesus into the world,—shall make an atonement for iniquity according to his truth—the word which he declared by his holy prophets since the world began. Or, if we retain the present version, and follow the points in עָוֹן yecuppar, reading "iniquity is purged" or "atoned for," the sense is unexceptionable, as we refer the mercy and the truth to God. But what an awful comment is that of Don Calmet, in which he expresses, not only his own opinion, but the staple doctrine of his own Church, the Romish! The reader shall have his own words: "L'iniquité se rachete par la miséricorde et la vérité." On expie ses péchés par des œuvres de miséricorde envers le prochain; par la clemence, par la douceur, par compassion, par les aumônes: et par la vérité—par la fidélité, la bonne foi, la droiture, l'équité dans le commerce. Voyez Prov. iii. 3, xiv. 22, xx. 28." "Iniquity is redeemed by mercy and truth." We expiate our sins by works of mercy towards our neighbour; by clemency, by kindness, by compassion, and by alms: and by truth—by fidelity, by trustworthiness, by uprightness, by equity in commerce." If this be so, why was Jesus incarnated? Why his agony and bloody sweat, his cross and passion, his death and burial, his resurrection and ascension? Was it only to supply a sufficient portion of merit for those who had neglected to make a fund for themselves? Is the guilt of sin so small in the sight of Divine justice, that a man can atone for it by manifesting good dispositions towards his neighbours, by giving some alms, and not doing these things for which he might be hanged? Why then did God make such a mighty matter of the redemption of the world? Why send his Son at all? An angel would have been more than sufficient; yea, even a sinner, who had been converted by his own compassion, alms-deeds, &c., would have been sufficient. And is not this the very doctrine of this most awfully fallen and corrupt Church? Has she not provided a fund of merit in her saints, of what was more than requisite for themselves, that it might be given, or sold out, to those who had not enough of their own? Now such is the doctrine of the Romish Church—grossly absurd, and destructively iniquitous! And because men cannot believe this, cannot believe these monstrosities, that Church will burn them to ashes. Ruthless Church! degenerated, fallen, corrupt, and corrupting! once a praise, now a curse, in the earth. Thank the blessed God, whose blood alone can expiate sin, that he has a Church upon the earth; and that the Romish is not the Catholic Church; and that it has not that political power by which it would subdue all things to itself.

Verse 7. When a man's ways please the Lord] God is the guardian and defence of all that fear and love him; and it is truly astonishing to see how wondrously God works in their behalf, raising them up friends, and turning their enemies into friends.

Verse 9. A man's heart deviseth his way] This is precisely the same sentiment as that contained in the first verse, on the true meaning of which so much has been already said.

Verse 10. A divine sentence] קֶסֶם kesem, "divination," as the margin has it. Is the meaning as follows! Though divination were applied to a righteous king's lips, to induce him to punish the innocent and spare the guilty, yet would not his lips transgress in judgment; so firmly attached is he to God, and so much is he under the Divine care and influence. Whatever judgment such a one pronounces, it may be considered as a decision from God.

Verse 11. All the weights of the bag are his] Alluding, probably, to the standard weights laid up in a bag in the sanctuary, and to which all weights in common use in the land were to be referred, in order to ascertain whether they were just : but some think the allusion is to the weights carried about by merchants in their girdles, by which they weigh the money, silver and gold, that they take in exchange for their merchandise. As the Chinese take no coin but gold and silver by weight, they carry about with them a sort of small steelyard, by which they weigh those metals taken in exchange.

Verse 12. It is an abomination to kings, &c.] In all these verses the wise man refers to monarchical government rightly administered. And the proverbs on this subject are all plain.

Verse 16. How much better—to get wisdom than gold ?] Who believes this, though spoken by the wisest of men, under Divine inspiration ?

Verse 17. The highway of the upright] The upright man is ever departing from evil ; this is his common road : and by keeping on in this way, his soul is preserved.

Verse 18. Pride goeth before destruction] Here pride is personified : it walks along, and has destruction in its train.

19 Better it is to be of an humble spirit with the lowly, than to divide the spoil with the proud.

In this verse we find the following Masoretic note in most Hebrew Bibles. חֲצִי הַכֶּסֶף chatsi hassepher : "the middle of the book." This verse is the middle verse ; and the first clause makes the middle of the words of the book of Proverbs.

Verse 22. Understanding is a well-spring of life] כֶּסֶף חַיִּים mekor chaiyim ; another allusion to the artery that carries the blood from the heart to distribute it to all the extremities of the body.

Verse 23. The heart of the wise teacheth his mouth] He has a wise heart ; he speaks as it dictates ; and therefore his speeches are all speeches of wisdom.

Verse 24. Pleasant words are as a honey-comb] The honey of which is sweeter than that which has been expressed from it, and has a much finer flavour before it has come in contact with the atmospheric air.

Verse 25. There is a way that seemeth right] This whole verse is precisely the same as that chap. xiv. 12.

Verse 26. He that laboreth] No thanks to a man for his labour and industry ; if he do not work he must starve.

Verse 27. An ungodly man diggeth up evil] How will the following suit !

In his lips—a burning fire.] His words are as *in-Verse 30. He shutteth his eyes to devise, &c.] He meditates deeply upon ways and means to commit sin.

He shuts his eyes that he may shut out all other ideas, that his whole soul may be in this.

Verse 31. The hoary head is a crown of glory] The latter part of the verse is very well added, for many a sinner has a hoary head.

Verse 32. He that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city.] It is much easier to subdue an enemy without than one within. There have been many kings who had conquered nations, and yet were slaves to their own passions. Alexander, who conquered the world, was a slave to intemperate anger, and in a fit of it slew Clytus, the best and most intimate of all his friends, and one whom he loved beyond all others.

The spirit of this maxim is so self-evident, that most nations have formed similar proverbs. The classical reader will remember the following in Hor., Odar. lib. ii., Od. 2 :—

Latius regnes, avidum domando
Spiritus, quam si Libyam remotis
Gadibus jungas, et uterque Pœnus Serviat uni.

“By virtue’s precepts to control
The furious passions of the soul,

31 <sup>r</sup> The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness.

32 <sup>s</sup> He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty ; and he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city.

33 The lot is cast into the lap : but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord.

Is over wider realms to reign,
Unenvied monarch, than if Spain
You could to distant Libya join,
And both the Carthages were thine.”

FRANCIS.

And the following from OVID is not less striking :

— Fortior est qui se, quam qui fortissima vincit
Mœnia, nec virtus altius ire potest.

“He is more of a hero who has conquered himself, than he who has taken the best fortified city.”

Beyond this self-conquest the highest courage cannot extend ; nor did their philosophy teach any thing more sublime.

Verse 33. The lot is cast into the lap] On the lot, see the note on Num. xxvi. 55. How far it may be proper now to put difficult matters to the lot, after earnest prayer and supplication, I cannot say. Formerly, it was both lawful and efficient ; for after it was solemnly cast, the decision was taken as coming immediately from the Lord. It is still practised, and its use is allowed even by writers on civil law. But those who need most to have recourse to the lot are those who have not piety to pray nor faith to trust to God for a positive decision. The lot should never be resorted to in indifferent matters ; they should be those of the greatest importance, in which it appears impossible for human prudence or foresight to determine.
In such cases the lot is an appeal to God, and he disposes of it according to his goodness, mercy, and truth. The result, therefore, cannot be fortuitous.

Verse 3. The fining pot is for silver] When silver is mixed, or suspected to be mixed, with base metal, it must be subjected to such a test as the cupel to purify it. And gold also must be purified by the action of the fire. So God tries hearts. He sends afflictions which penetrate the soul, and give a man to see his state, so that he may apply to the spirit of judgment and the spirit of burning, to destroy what cannot stand the fire, to separate and burn up all the dross.

Verse 4. A wicked doer giveth heed] An evil heart is disposed and ever ready to receive evil; and liars delight in lies.

Verse 5. He that is glad at calamities] He who is pleased to hear of the misfortune of another will, in the course of God's just government, have his own multiplied.

Verse 7. Excellent speech becometh not a fool] This proverb is suitable to those who affect, in public speaking, fine language, which neither comports with their ordinary conversation, nor with their education. Often fine words are injudiciously brought in, and are as unbecoming and irrelevant as a cart wheel among clockwork.

Verse 8. A gift is as a precious stone] It both enriches and ornaments. In the latter clause there is an evident allusion to cut stones. Whithersoever you turn them, they reflect the light, are brilliant and beautiful.

Verse 10. A reproof entereth more] Though the rod, judiciously applied, is a great instrument of knowledge, yet it is of no use where incurable dullness, or want of intellect, prevails. Besides, there are generous dispositions on which counsel will work more than stripes.

Verse 12. Let a bear robbed of her whelps] At which times such animals are peculiarly fierce. See the note on 2 Sam. xvii. 8.

Verse 13. Whoso rewardeth evil for good] Here is a most awful warning. As many persons are guilty of the sin of ingratitude, and of paying kindness with unkindness, and good with evil, it is no wonder we find so much wretchedness among men; for God's word cannot fail; evil shall not depart from the houses and families of such persons.

Verse 14. The beginning of strife is as when one letteth out water] As soon as the smallest breach is made in the dike or dam, the water begins to press from all parts towards the breach; the resistance becomes too great to be successfully opposed, so that dikes and all are speedily swept away. Such is the beginning of contentions, quarrels, lawsuits, &c.

Leave off contention, before it be meddled with.] As you see what an alteration must lead to, therefore do not begin it. Before it be mingled together, והתלכך היתגאלה, before the spirits of the contending parties come into conflict—are joined together in battle, and begin to deal out mutual reflections and reproaches. When you see that the dispute is likely to take this turn, leave it off immediately.

hands, or shaking hands, was anciently the form in concluding a contract. See notes on chap. vi. 1.

Verse 19. He that exalteth his gate] In different parts of Palestine they are obliged to have the doors of their courts and houses very low, not more than three feet high, to prevent the Arabs, who scarcely ever leave the backs of their horses, from riding into the courts and houses, and spoiling their goods. He, then, who, through pride and ostentation, made a high gate, exposed himself to destruction; and is said here to seek it, because he must know that this would be a necessary consequence of exalting his gate. But although the above is a fact, yet possibly gate is here taken for the mouth; and the exalting of the gate may mean proud boasting and arrogant speaking, such as has a tendency to kindle and maintain strife. And this interpretation seems to agree better with the scope of the context than the above.

Verse 22. A merry heart doeth good like a medicine] Instead of גֵּחָה gehah, a medicine, it appears that the Chaldee and Syriac had read in their copies גֵּוָה gevah, the body, as they translate in this way. This makes the apposition here more complete: "A merry heart doeth good to the body; but a broken spirit drieth the bones." Nothing has such a direct tendency to ruin health and waste out life as grief, anxiety, fretfulness, bad tempers, &c. All these work death.

24 <sup>h</sup> Wisdom is before him that hath understanding: but the eyes of a fool are in the ends of the earth.

25 <sup>i</sup> A foolish son is a grief to his father, and a bitterness to her that bare him.

26 <sup>k</sup> Also to punish the just is not good, nor to strike princes for equity.

27 <sup>l</sup> He that hath knowledge spareth his words: and a man of understanding is of <sup>m</sup> an excellent spirit.

28 <sup>n</sup> Even a fool, when he holdeth his peace, is counted wise: and he that shutteth his lips is esteemed a man of understanding.

Verse 23. A gift out of the bosom] Out of his purse; as in their bosoms, above their girdles, the Asiatics carry their purses. I have often observed this.

Verse 24. Are in the ends of the earth.] Wisdom is within the sight and reach of every man: but he whose desires are scattered abroad, who is always aiming at impossible things, or is of an unsteady disposition, is not likely to find it.

Verse 26. Nor to strike princes for equity.] To fall out with the ruler of the people, and to take off his head under pretence of his not being a just or equitable governor, is unjust. To kill a king on the ground of justice is a most dreadful omen to any land. Where was it ever done, that it promoted the public prosperity? No experiment of this kind has ever yet succeeded, howsoever worthless the king might be.

Verse 28. Even a fool] He is counted wise as to that particular. He may know that he cannot speak well, and he has sense enough to keep from speaking. He is, as to that particular, a wise fool.

A man may be golden-mouthed and silver-tongued in eloquence; but to know when and where to speak and to be silent, is better than diamonds. But who that thinks he can speak well can refrain from speaking? His tongue has no rest.

NOTES ON CHAP. XVIII.

Verse 1. Through desire a man, having separated himself] The original is difficult and obscure. The Vulgate, Septuagint, and Arabic, read as follows: "He who wishes to break with his friend, and seeks occasions or pretences, shall at all times be worthy of blame."

My old MS. Bible translates, Occassoun seeketh that will go awef fro a freend: at al tyme he schal ben warf=able.

Coverdale thus: "Who so hath pleasure to sowe discord, piketh a quarrel in every thinge."

Bible by Barker, 1615: "Fro the desire thereof he will separate himself to seeke it, and occupie himself in all wisdom." Which has in the margin the following note: "He that loveth wisdom will separate himself from all impediments, and give himself wholly to seek it."

The Hebrew להאוא יבקש נפרד בכל תושיה יתהלך lethaavah yebakkesh niphrad, bechol tushiyah yithgalla. The nearest translation to the words is perhaps the following: "He who is separated shall seek the desired thing, (i. e., the object of his desire,) and shall intermeddle (mingle himself) with all realities, or all essential knowledge." He finds that he can make little progress in the investigation of Divine and natural things, if he have much to do with secular or trifling matters: he therefore separates himself as well from unprofitable pursuits as from frivolous company; and then enters into the spirit of his pursuit; is not satisfied with superficial observances, but examines the substance and essence, as far as possible, of those things which have been the objects of his desire. This appears to me the best meaning: the reader may judge for himself.

Verse 2. But that his heart may discover itself.] It is a fact that most vain and foolish people are never satisfied in company, but in showing their own nonsense and emptiness. But this verse may be understood as confirming the view already given of the preceding, and may be translated thus: "But a fool doth not delight in understanding, though it should even manifest itself:" so I understand בהתגלות כי ki im behithgalloth. The separated person seeks understanding in every hidden thing, and feels his toil well repaid when he finds it, even after the most painful and expensive search: the other regards it not, though its secret springs should be laid open to him without toil or expense.

Verse 3. When the wicked cometh, &c.] Would it not be better to read this verse thus? "When the wicked cometh, contempt cometh; and with ignominy cometh reproach." A wicked man is despised even by the wicked. He who falls under ignominy falls under reproach.

Verse 4. The words of a man's mouth] That is, the wise sayings of a wise man are like deep waters; howsoever much you pump or draw off, you do not appear to lessen them.

The well-spring of wisdom] Where there is a sound understanding, and a deep, well-informed mind, its wisdom and its counsels are an incessant stream, מקור חיים mekor chochmah, "the vein of wisdom," ever throwing out its healthy streams: but מקור חיים mekor chaiyim, "the vein of lives," is the reading of eight of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., and is countenanced by the Septuagint, πηγή ζωης, "the fountain of life." And so the Arabic, عين حياه. This is the more likely to be the true reading, because the figure of the heart propelling the blood through the great aorta, to send it to all parts of the animal system, is a favourite with Solomon, as it was with his father David. See the note on Psa. xxxvi 9; Prov. x. 11, &c.

Verse 5. To accept the person of the wicked] We must not, in judicial cases, pay any attention to a man's riches, influence, friends, offices, &c., but judge the case according to its own merits. But when the wicked rich man opposes and oppresses the poor righteous, then all those things should be utterly forgotten.

Verse 8. The words of a tale-bearer] דברי דיבrey nigan, "the words of the whisperer," the busy-body, the busy, meddling croaker. Verba bilinguis, "the words of the double-tongued."—Vulgate. The words of the twisel tunge.—Old MS. Bible. "The words of a slanderer."—Coverdale.

The words of a deceiver, the fair-spoken, deeply-malicious man, though they appear soft and gracious, are wounds deeply injurious.

The original word is כהלהמים kemithlahamim; they are as soft, or simple, or undesigning. But Schultens gives another meaning. He observes that lahamah in Arabic signifies to "swallow down quickly or greedily." Such words are like dainties, eagerly swallowed, because inviting to the taste; like gingerbread, apparently gilded over, though with Dutch leaf, which is a preparation of copper; or sweetmeats powdered over with red candied seeds, which are thus formed by red lead; both deeply ruinous to the tender bowels of the poor little innocents, but, because of their sweetness and inviting colour, greedily swallowed down. This makes a good reading, and agrees with the latter clause of the verse, "they go down into the innermost parts of the belly."

Verse 9. He also that is slothful] A slothful man neglects his work, and the materials go to ruin: the waster, he destroys the materials. They are both destroyers.

Verse 10. The name of the Lord is a strong tower] The name of the Lord may be taken for the Lord himself; he is a strong tower, a refuge, and place of complete safety, to all that trust in him. What a strong fortress is to the besieged, the like is God to his persecuted, tempted, afflicted followers.

Verse 11. The rich man's wealth] See chap. x. 15.

Verse 12. Before destruction] See on chap. xi. 2; and xvi. 18.

Verse 13. He that answereth a matter] This is a common case; before a man can tell out his story, another will begin his. Before a man has made his response, the other wishes to confute piecemeal, though he has had his own speech already. This is foolishness to them. They are ill-bred. There are many also that give judgment before they hear the whole of the cause, and express an opinion before they hear the state of the case. How absurd, stupid, and foolish!

Verse 14. The spirit of a man will sustain] A man sustains the ills of his body, and the trials of life, by the strength and energy of his mind. But if the mind be wounded, if this be cast down, if slow-consuming care and grief have shot the dagger into the soul, what can then sustain the man? Nothing but the unseen God. Therefore, let the afflicted pray. A man's own spirit has, in general, sufficient fortitude to bear up under the unavoidable trials of life; but when the conscience is wounded by sin, and the soul is dying by iniquity, who can lift him up? God alone; for salvation is of the Lord.

Verse 16. A man's gift maketh room for him] It is, and ever has been, a base and degrading practice in Asiatic countries, to bring a gift or present to the great man into whose presence you come. Without this there is no audience, no favour, no justice. This arose from the circumstance that men must not approach the altar of God without an offering. Potentates, wishing to be considered as petty gods, demanded a similar homage:—

Munera, crede mihi, capiunt hominesque deosque;
Placatur donis Jupiter ipse suis. OVID.

"Believe me, gifts prevail much with both gods and men: even Jupiter himself is pleased with his own offerings."

Verse 17. He that is first in his own cause] Any man may, in the first instance, make out a fair tale, because he has the choice of circumstances and arguments. But when the neighbour cometh and searcheth him, he examines all, dissects all, swears and cross-questions every witness, and brings out truth and fact.

Verse 18. The lot causeth contentions to cease] See note on chap. xvi. 33.

Verse 19. A brother offended is harder to be won than a strong city] Almost all the versions agree in the following reading: "A brother assisted by a brother, is like a fortified city; and their decisions are like the bars of a city." Coverdale is both plain and terse: "The unite of brethren is stronger then a castell, and they that holde together are like the barre of a palace." The fable of the dying father, his sons, and the bundle of faggots, illustrates this proverb. Unity among brethren makes them invincible; small things grow great by concord. If we take the words according to the common version, we see them express what, alas! we know to be too generally true: that when brothers fall out, it is with extreme difficulty that they can be reconciled. And fraternal enmities are generally strong and inveterate.

Verse 20. With the fruit of his mouth] Our own words frequently shape our good or evil fortune in life.

Verse 21. Death and life are in the power of the tongue] This may apply to all men. Many have lost their lives by their tongue, and some have saved their lives by it: but it applies most forcibly to public pleaders; on many of their tongues hangs life or death.

Verse 22. Whoso findeth a wife findeth a good thing] Marriage, with all its troubles and embarrassments, is a blessing from God; and there are few cases where a wife of any sort is not better than none, because celibacy is an evil; for God himself hath said, "It is not good for man to be alone." None of the versions, except the Chaldee, are pleased with the naked simplicity of the Hebrew text, hence they all add good: "He that findeth a good wife findeth a good thing;" and most people, who have not deeply considered the subject, think the assertion, without this qualification, is absurd. Some copies of the Targum, and apparently one of Kennicott's MSS., have the addition טובה tobah, good; but this would be an authority too slender to justify changing the Hebrew text; yet Houbigant, Kennicott, and other able critics, argue for it. The Septuagint is not satisfied without an addition: "But he who puts away a good wife, puts away a good thing: and he that retains an adulteress, is a fool and wicked." In this addition the Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabie, agree with the Septuagint. The Hebrew text, as it stands, teaches a general doctrine by a simple but general proposition: "He that findeth a wife findeth a good thing." So St. Paul: "Marriage is honourable in all." Had the world been left, in this respect, to the unbridled propensities of man, in what a horrible state would society have been—if indeed society could have existed, or civilization have taken place—if marriage had not obtained among men! As to good wives and bad wives, they are relatively so, in general; and most of them that have been bad afterwards, have been good at first; and we well know the best things may deteriorate, and the world generally allows that where there are matrimonial contentions, there are faults on both sides.

Verse 24. A man that hath friends must show himself friendly] Love begets love; and love requires love as its recompense. If a man do not maintain a friendly carriage, he cannot expect to retain his friends. Friendship is a good plant; but it requires cultivation to make it grow.

thing, and obtaineth favour of the LORD.

23 The poor useth entreaties; but the rich answereth <sup>v</sup> roughly.

24 A man that hath friends must show himself friendly: <sup>w</sup> and there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother.

There is a kind of factitious friendship in the world, that, to show one's self friendly in it, is very expensive, and in every way utterly unprofitable: it is maintained by expensive parties, feasts, &c., where the table groans with dainties, and where the conversation is either jejune and insipid, or calumnious; backbiting, talebearing, and scandal, being the general topics of the different squads in company.

There is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother.] In many cases the genuine friend has shown more attachment, and rendered greater benefits, than the natural brother. Some apply this to God; others to Christ; but the text has no such meaning.

But critics and commentators are not agreed on the translation of this verse. The original is condensed and obscure. איש רעים להרויען ish reim lechithroca, or lechithroang, as some would read, who translate: A man of friends may ring again; i. e., he may boast and mightily exult: but there is a friend, אהב oheb, a lover, that sticketh closer, דבק dabek, is glued or cemented, מאח meach, beyond, or more than, a brother. The former will continue during prosperity, but the latter continues closely united to his friend, even in the most disastrous circumstances.

Hence that maxim of Cicero, so often repeated, and so well known:—

Amicus certus in re incerta cernitur.

"In doubtful times the genuine friend is known."

A late commentator has translated the verse thus:—

The man that hath many friends is ready to be ruined:

But there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother. HOLDEN.

"A friend that delyteth in love, doth a man more friendship, and sticketh faster unto him, than a brother."—Coverdale.

"A man that hath friends ought to show himself friendly, for a friend is nearer than a brother."—BARKER'S Bible, 1615.

"A man amicable to fellowship, more a friend shall be than a brother."—Old MS. Bible. The two last verses in this chapter, and the two first of the next, are wanting in the Septuagint and Arabie.

These are the principal varieties; out of them the reader may choose. I have already given my opinion.

NOTES ON CHAP. XIX.

Verse 1. Better is the poor] The upright poor man is always to be preferred to the rich or self-sufficient fool.

Verse 2. Also, that the soul be without knowledge, it is not good] Would it not be plainer, as it is more literal, to say, "Also, to be without knowledge, is not good for the soul!" The soul was made for God; and to be without his knowledge, to be unacquainted with him, is not only not good, but the greatest evil the soul can suffer, for it involves all other evils. The Chaldee and Syriac have: "He who knows not his own soul, it is not good to him." "Where no discretion is, there the soul is not well."—Coverdale.

And he that hasteth with his feet sinneth.] And this will be the ease with him who is not Divinely instructed. A child does nothing cautiously, because it is uninstructed; a savage is also rash and precipitate, till experience instructs him. A man who has not the knowledge of God is incautions, rash, headstrong, and precipitate: and hence he sinneth—he is continually missing the mark, and wounding his own soul.

Verse 3. The foolishness of man] Most men complain of cross providences, because they get into straits and difficulties through the perverseness of their ways; and thus they fret against God; whereas, in every instance, they are the causes of their own calamities. O how inconsistent is man!

Verse 4. The poor is separated from his neighbour.] Because he has the "disease of all-shunned poverty."

Verse 7. Do hate him] They shun him as they do the person they hate. They neither hate him positively, nor love him: they disregard him; they will have nothing to do with him. שׂנא sana signifies not only to hate, but to show a less degree of love to one how much more do his friends go <sup>l</sup> far from him? he pursueth them with words, yet they are wanting to him.

8 He that getteth <sup>m</sup> wisdom loveth his own soul: he that keepeth understanding <sup>n</sup> shall find good.

9 <sup>o</sup> A false witness shall not be unpunished, and he that speaketh lies shall perish.

10 Delight is not seemly for a fool; much less <sup>p</sup> for a servant to have rule over princes.

11 <sup>q</sup> The <sup>r</sup> discretion of a man deferreth his anger; <sup>s</sup> and it is his glory to pass over a transgression.

12 <sup>t</sup> The king's wrath is as the roaring of a lion: but his favour is <sup>u</sup> as dew upon the grass.

13 <sup>v</sup> A foolish son is the calamity of his father: <sup>w</sup> and the contentions of a wife are a continual dropping.

than another. So Jacob loved Rachel, but hated Leah—showed her less affection than he did to Rachel.

Verse 10. Delight is not seemly for a fool] תענוג taanug, splendid or luxurious living, rank, equipage, &c. These sit ill on a fool, though he be by birth a lord.

For a servant to have rule over princes.] I pity the king who delivers himself into the hands of his own ministers. Such a one loses his character, and cannot be respected by his subjects, or rather their subjects. But it is still worse when a person of mean extraction is raised to the throne, or to any place of power; he is generally cruel and tyrannical.

Verse 11. It is his glory to pass over a transgression.] "No," says what is termed a man of honour; "he must meet me as a gentleman; I must have his blood, let God say what he will." O poor, dastardly coward! thou canst not bear the reproach of poor, flimsy, paltry fellows who ridicule thee, because thou hast refused to commit murder. Such laws should be put down by law; and the man that gives a challenge should be hanged, because he intends to commit murder.

Verse 12. The king's wrath is as the roaring of a lion] There is nothing more dreadful than the roaring of this tyrant of the forest. At the sound of it all other animals tremble, flee away, and hide themselves. The king who is above law, and rules without law, and whose will is his own law, is like the lion. This is strongly descriptive of the character of Asiatic sovereigns.

Verse 13. The contentions of a wife are a continual dropping.] The man who has got such a wife is like a tenant who has got a cottage with a bad roof, through every part of which the rain either drops or pours. He can neither sit, stand, work, nor sleep, without being exposed to these droppings. God help the man who is in such a case, with house or wife!

Verse 14. A prudent wife is from the Lord.] One who has a good understanding, אשה משכלה ishshah masealeth; who avoids complaining, though she may often have cause for it.

Verse 15. Into a deep sleep] תרדמה tardemah, the same into which Adam was thrown, before Eve was taken from his side. Sloth renders a man utterly unconscious of all his interests. Though he has frequently felt hunger, yet he is regardless that his continual slothfulness must necessarily plunge him into more sufferings.

Verse 17. Lendeth unto the Lord] O what a word is this! God makes himself debtor for every thing that is given to the poor! Who would not advance much upon such credit? God will pay it again. And in no case has he ever forfeited his word.

Verse 18. Let not thy soul spare for his crying.] This is a hard precept for a parent. Nothing affects the heart of a parent so much as a child's cries and tears. But it is better that the child may be caused to cry, when the correction may be healthful to his soul, than that the parent should cry afterwards, when the child is grown to man's estate, and his evil habits are sealed for life.

Verse 19. A man of great wrath] He who is of an irritable, fiery disposition, will necessarily get himself into many broils; and he that is surety for him once is likely to be called on again and again for the same friendly office.

Verse 21. There are many devices, &c.] The same sentiment as in chap. xvi. 1, where see the note.

Verse 24. A slothful man hideth his hand in his bosom] Is too lazy to feed himself. If he dip his hand once in the dish, he is too lazy to put it in a second time. It is a strange case that a man, through his excessive slothfulness, would rather starve than put himself to the trouble to eat.

Verse 26. He that wasteth his father] Destroys his substance by riotous or extravagant living, so as to embitter his latter end by poverty and affliction; and adds to this wickedness the expulsion of his aged widowed mother from the paternal house; is a son of shame—a most shameful man; and a son of reproach—one whose conduct cannot be sufficiently execrated. Who tormenteth the father, and fleeth the mother, schen-fut schal ben, and unblissful.—Old MS. Bible. The common reading of the Vulgate is, et fugat matrem, and expels his mother; but the Old Bible was taken from a copy that had fugit matrem, shuns his mother, flees away from her, leaves her to affliction and penury. It is prostitution of the term to call such, man.

Verse 27. Cease, my son] Hear nothing that would lead thee away from God and his truth.

Verse 29. Stripes for the back of fools.] Profane and wicked men expose themselves to the punishments denounced against such by just laws. Avoid, therefore, both their company and their end.

NOTES ON CHAP. XX.

Verse 1. Wine is a mocker] It deceives by its fragrance, intoxicates by its strength, and renders the intoxicated ridiculous.

Strong drink] שכר shechar, any strong fermented liquor, whether of the vine, date, or palm species.

Verse 2. The fear of a king] Almost the same with chap. xix. 12, which see.

Verse 3. It is an honour for a man] The same sentiment as chap. xix. 11.

Verse 4. The sluggard will not plough] For other parts of this character, see the preceding chapter. It is seldom that there is a season of very cold weather in Palestine ; very cold days sometimes occur, with wind, rain, and sleet. They begin their ploughing in the latter end of September, and sow their early wheat by the middle of October. And this is often the case in England itself. The meaning of the proverb is : the slothful man, under the pretence of unfavourable weather, neglects cultivating his land till the proper time is elapsed.

Verse 5. Counsel in the heart of man] Men of the deepest and most comprehensive minds are rarely apt, unsolicited, to join in any discourse, in which they might appear even to the greatest advantage ; but a man of understanding will elicit this, by questions framed for the purpose, and thus pump up the salubrious waters from the deep and capacious well. The metaphor is fine and expressive.

Verse 6. Most men will proclaim] Many men merciful ben clepid : a faithful man forsoth, who sehal finde ?—Old MS. Bible.

Verse 8. A king that sitteth in the throne of judgment] Kings should see to the administration of the laws, as well as of the state transactions, of their kingdom. In the British constitution there is a court for the king, called the King's Bench, where he should sit, and where he is always supposed to be sitting. The eyes—the presence, of the monarch in such a place, scatter evil—he sees into the case himself, and gives right judgment, for he can have no self-interest. Corrupt judges, and falsifying counsellors, cannot stand before him ; and the villain is too deeply struck with the majesty and state of the monarch, to face out iniquity before him.

Verse 9. Who can say, I have made my heart clean] No man. But thousands can testify that the blood of Jesus Christ has cleansed them from all unrighteousness. And he is pure from his sin, who is justified freely through the redemption that is in Jesus.

Verse 10. Divers weights and divers measures] A pefse and a pefse ;—Old MS. Bible : from the French pois, weight. Hebrew : “ A stone and a stone ; an ephah and an ephah.” One the standard, the other below it ; one to buy with, the other to sell by.

Verse 11. Even a child is known by his doings] That is, in general terms, the effect shows the nature of the cause. “ A childe is known by his conversation,” says Corerdale. A child is easily detected when he has done evil : he immediately begins to excuse and vindicate himself, and profess his innocence, almost before accusation takes place. Some think the words should be understood, every child will dissemble ; this amounts nearly to the meaning given above.

But probably the principal thing intended by the wise man is, that we may easily learn from the child what the man will be. In general, they give indications of those trades and callings for which they are adapted by nature. And, on the whole, we cannot go by a surer guide in preparing our children for future life, than by observing their early propensities. The future engineer is seen in the little handicraftsman of two years old. Many children are crossed in these early propensities to a particular calling, to their great prejudice, and the loss of their parents, as they seldom settle at, or succeed in, the business to which they are tied, and to which nature has given them no tendency. These infantine predilections to particular callings, we should consider as indications of Divine Providence, and its calling of them to that work for which they are peculiarly fitted.

Verse 12. The hearing ear and the seeing eye] Every good we possess comes from God; and we should neither use our eyes, nor our ears, nor any thing we possess, but in strict subserviency to his will.

Verse 13. Love not sleep, lest thou come to poverty] Sleep, indescribable in its nature, is an indescribable blessing; but how often is it turned into a curse! It is like food; a certain measure of it restores and invigorates exhausted nature; more than that oppresses and destroys life. A lover of sleep is a paltry, insignificant character.

Verse 14. It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer] How apt are men to deery the goods they wish to purchase, in order that they may get them at a cheaper rate; and, when they have made their bargain and carried it off, boast to others at how much less than its value they have obtained it! Are such honest men? Is such knavery actionable? Can such be punished only in another world? St. Augustine tells us a pleasant story on this subject: A certain mountebank published, in the full theatre, that at the next entertainment he would show to every man present what was in his heart. The time came, and the concourse was immense; all waited, with deathlike silence, to hear what he would say to each. He stood up, and in a single sentence redeemed his pledge:—

VILI VULTIS EMERE, ET CARO VENDERE.

"You all wish to BUY CHEAP, and SELL DEAR."

He was applauded; for every one felt it to be a description of his own heart, and was satisfied that all others were similar. "In quo dicto levissimi scenici omnes tamen conscientias invenerunt suas."—DE TRINITATE, lib. xiii., c. 3; OPER. vol. vii., col. 930.

Verse 15. There is gold] Gold is valuable, silver is valuable, and so are jewels; but the teachings of sound knowledge are more valuable than all.

Verse 16. Take his garment that is surety for a stranger] I suppose the meaning to be, If a stranger or unknown person become surety in a case, greater caution should be used, and such security taken from this stranger as would prevent him from running away from his engagements.

Verse 17. Bread of deceit is sweet] Property acquired by falsehood, speculation, &c., without labour, is pleasant to the unprincipled, slothful man; but there is a curse in it, and the issue will prove it.

Verse 18. With good advice make war.] Perhaps there is not a precept in this whole book so little regarded as this. Most of the wars that are undertaken are wars of injustice, ambition, aggrandizement, and caprice, which can have had no previous good counsel. A minister, who is perhaps neither a good nor a great man, counsels his king to make war; the cabinet must be brought into it, and a sufficient number out of the states of the kingdom gained over to support it. By and by, what was begun through caprice must be maintained through necessity. Places must be created, and offices must be filled with needy dependents, whose interest it may be to protract the war, till they get enough to pay their debts, and secure independence for life. And for these most important ends the blood of the country is spilled, and the treasures of the people exhausted! I have met with a fact precisely of this kind under the reign of Louis XIV.

Verse 20. Whoso curseth his father] Such persons were put to death under the law; see Exod. xxi. 17; Lev. xx. 9; and here it is said, Their lamp shall be put out—they shall have no posterity; God shall cut them off both root and branch.

Verse 21. An inheritance—gotten hastily] Gotten by speculation; by lucky hits; not in the fair progressive way of traffic, in which money has its natural increase. All such inheritances are short-lived; God's blessing is not in them, because they are not the produce of industry; and they lead to idleness, pride, fraud, and knavery. A speculation in trade is a public nuisance and curse. How many honest men have been ruined by such!

Verse 22. I will recompense evil] Wait on the Lord; judgment is his, and his judgments are sure. In the mean time pray for the conversion of your enemy.

Verse 24. Man's goings are of the Lord] He, by his providence, governs all the great concerns of the world. Man often traverses these operations; but he does it to his own damage. An old writer quaintly says: "They who will carve for themselves shall cut their fingers."

Verse 25. Who devoureth that which is holy] It is a sin to take that which belongs to God, his worship, or his work, and devote it to one's own use.

And after vows to make inquiry.] That is, if a man be inwardly making a rash vow, the fitness or unfitness, the necessity, expediency, and propriety of the thing should be first carefully considered. But how foolish to make the vow first, and afterwards to inquire whether it was right in the sight of God to do it! This equally condemns all rash and inconsiderate conduct. My old MS. Bible translates, Falling is of men often to bowen to scyntis, and after, the vow is agen drawn. Is it possible that Wiclif could have translated this verse thus? as it strongly countenances vows to and invocations of saints.

Verse 26. Bringeth the wheel over them.] He threshes them in his anger, as the wheel does the grain on the threshing-floor. Every one knows that grain was separated from its husks, in Palestine, by the feet of the oxen trampling among the sheaves, or bringing a rough-shod wheel over them. Asiatic kings often threshed their people, to bring out their property; but this is not what is intended here.

Verse 27. The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord] God has given to every man a mind, which he so enlightens by his own Spirit, that the man knows how to distinguish good from evil; and conscience, which springs from this, searches the inmost recesses of the soul.

Verse 28. Mercy and truth preserve the king] These are the brightest jewels in the royal crown; and those kings who are most governed by them have the stablest government.

Verse 29. The glory of young men is their strength] Scarcely any young man affects to be wise, learned, &c.; but all delight to show their strength and to be reputed strong: Agility, one evidence of strength, they particularly affect; and hence their various trials of strength and fleetness in public exercises.

And the beauty of old men is the gray head.] They no longer affect strength and agility, but they affect wisdom, experience, prudent counsels, &c., and are fond of being reputed wise, and of having respect paid to their understanding and experience.

Verse 30. The blueness of a wound] חֲבֵרוֹת chaburoth, from חָבַר chabar, to unite, to join together. Does it not refer to the cicatrice of a wound when, in its healing, the two lips are brought together? By this union the wound is healed; and by the previous discharge the lacerated ends of fibres and blood-vessels are purged away. So stripes, though they hurt for the time, become the means of correcting and discharging the moral evil of the inmost soul, the vice of the heart, the easily-besetting sin.

In this chapter, verses fourteen to nineteen, inclusive, are wanting in the Septuagint and Arabic; and the tenth, eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth, come in after the twenty-second. It is difficult to account for these variations, unless they were occasioned by the change of leaves in MSS.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXI.

Verse 1. The king's heart is in the hand of the Lord] The Lord is the only ruler of princes. He alone can govern and direct their counsels. But there is an allusion here to the Eastern method of watering their lands. Several canals are dug from one stream; and by opening a particular sluice, the husbandman can direct a stream to whatever part he please: so the king's heart, wherever it turns; i. e., to whomsoever he is disposed to show favour. As the land is enriched with the streams employed in irrigation; so is the favourite of the king, by the royal bounty: and God can induce the king to give that bounty to whomsoever he will. See Harmer.

Verse 2. The Lord pondereth the hearts.] Every man feels strongly attached to his own opinions, modes of acting, &c.; and though he will not easily give up any thing to the judgment of a neighbour, whom he will naturally consider at least as fallible as himself, yet he should consider that the unerring eye of God is upon him; and he should endeavour to see that what he does is acceptable in the eye of his Maker and Judge.

Verse 3. To do justice and judgment] The words of Samuel to Saul. See note on 1 Sam. xv. 23.

Verse 4. A high look] The evidence of pride, self-conceit, and vanity. A proud heart, from which the high look, &c., come.

And the ploughing] נר ner, lucerna, the lamp, the prosperity and posterity of the wicked; is sin—it is evil in the seed, and evil in the root, evil in the branch, and evil in the fruit. They are full of sin themselves, and what they do is sinful.

Verse 6. Of them that seek death] Instead of מִבְּקֵשׁ

mebakshey, "them that seek," several MSS., some ancient editions, with Symmachus, the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Arabic, have מִבְּקֵשׁ makeshey, the snares. He who gets treasures by a lying tongue, pursues vanity into the snares of death. Our common translation may be as good. But he who, by the snares of his tongue, endeavours to buy and sell to the best advantage, is pursuing what is empty in itself; and he is ensnared by death, while he is attempting to ensnare others.

Verse 7. The robbery of the wicked] The wicked shall be terrified and ruined by the means they use to aggrandize themselves. And as they refuse to do judgment, they shall have judgment without mercy.

Verse 9. In a corner of the housetop] A shed raised on the flat roof:—a wide house; בית חבר beith chaber, "a house of fellowship;" what we should call a lodging-house, or a house occupied by several families. This was usual in the East, as well as in the West. Some think a house of festivity is meant: hence my old MS. Bible has, the hous and feste.

Verse 11. When the scorner is punished] When those who mock at religion, blaspheme against its Author, and endeavour to poison society, and disturb the peace of the community by their false doctrine, meet with that degree of punishment which their crimes, as far as they affect the public peace, deserve; then the simple, who were either led away, or in danger of being led away, by their pernicious doctrines, are made wise. And when those thus made wise are instructed in the important truths which have been decried by those unprincipled men, then they receive knowledge; and one such public example is made a blessing to thousands. But only blasphemy against God and the

Verse 12. The righteous man wisely considereth] This verse is understood as implying the pious concern of a righteous man, for a wicked family, whom he endeavours by his instructions to bring into the way of knowledge and peace.

Verse 13. Whoso stoppeth his ears] See the conduct of the priest and Levite to the man who fell among thieves; and let every man learn from this, that he who shuts his ear against the cry of the poor, shall have the ear of God shut against his cry. The words are quite plain; there is no difficulty here.

Verse 16. The man once enlightened, that wandereth out of the way of understanding, in which he had walked, shall remain—have a permanent residence—in the congregation of the dead; רפאים rephaim, the lost; either separate spirits in general, or rather the assembly of separate spirits, which had fallen from primitive rectitude; and shall not be restored to the Divine favour; particularly those sinners who were destroyed by the deluge. This passage intimates that those called rephaim are in a state of conscious existence. It is difficult to assign the true meaning of the word in several places where it occurs: but it seems to mean the state of separate spirits, i. e., of those separated from their bodies, and awaiting the judgment of the great day: but the congregation may also include the fallen angels. Verse 17. He that loveth pleasure] That follows gaming, fowling, hunting, coursing, &c., when he should be attending to the culture of the fields, shall be a poor man; and, I may safely add, shall be so deservedly poor, as to have none to pity him.

Verse 18. The wicked shall be a ransom for the righteous] God often in his judgments cuts off the wicked, in order to prevent them from destroying the righteous. And in general, we find that the wicked fall into the traps and pits they have digged for the righteous.

Verse 22. A wise man scaleth the city of the mighty] Wisdom is in many respects preferable to strength, even in the case of defence. See what skill does in the fortification and reduction of strong places.

Verse 25. The desire of the slothful killeth him] He desires to eat, drink, and be clothed: but as he does not labour, hence he dies with this desire in his heart, envying those who possess plenty through their labour and industry. Hence he is said to covet greedily all the day long, ver. 26, while the righteous, who has been laborious and diligent, has enough to eat, and some to spare.

Verse 27. When he bringeth it with a wicked mind?] If such a person even bring the sacrifices and offerings which God requires, they are an abomination to him, because the man is wicked; and if such offerings be imperfect in themselves, or of goods ill-gotten, or offered by constraint of custom, &c., they are doubly abominable.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXII.

Verse 1. A good name] שֵׁם shem, a name, put for reputation, credit, fame. Used nearly in the same way that we use it: "He has got a name;" "his name stands high;" for "He is a man of credit and reputation." טובָא toba, καλόν, hamood, and bonum, are added by the Chaldee, Septuagint, Arabic, and Vulgate, all signifying good or excellent.

Is rather to be chosen than great riches] Because character will support a man in many circumstances; and there are many rich men that have no name: but the word of the man of character will go farther than all their riches.

Verse 2. The rich and poor meet together] אֲשִׁיר ashir, the opulent, whether in money, land, or property; רָשׁ rash, the man that is destitute of these, and lives by his labour, whether a handicraftsman, or one that tills the ground. In the order of God, the rich and the poor live together, and are mutually helpful to each other. Without the poor, the rich could not be supplied with the articles which they consume; for the poor include all the labouring classes of society: and without the rich, the poor could get no vent for the produce of their labour, nor, in many cases, labour itself. The poor have more time to labour than the mere necessities of life require; their extra time is employed in providing a multitude of things which are called the superfluities of life, and which the rich especially consume. All the poor man's time is thus employed; and he is paid for his extra labour by the rich. The rich should not despise the poor, without whom he could neither have his comforts, nor maintain his state. The poor should not envy the rich, without whom he could neither get employment, nor the necessaries of life.

The Lord is the Maker of them all.] Both the states are in the order of God's providence, and both are equally important in his sight. Merely considered as men, God loves the simple artificer or labourer as much as he does the king; though the office of the latter, because of its entering into the plan of his government of the world, is of infinitely greater consequence than the trade of the poor artificer. Neither should despise the other; neither should envy the other. Both are useful; both important; both absolutely necessary to each other's welfare and support; and both are accountable to God for the manner in which they acquit themselves in those duties of life which God has respectively assigned them. The abject poor—those who are destitute of health and the means of life—God in effect lays at the rich man's door, that by his superfluities they may be supported. How wise is that ordinance which has made the rich and the poor! Pity it were not better understood!

Verse 3. A prudent man foreseeth the evil] God in mercy has denied man the knowledge of futurity; but in its place he has given him hope and prudence. By hope he is continually expecting and anticipating good; by prudence he derives and employs means to secure it. His experience shows him that there are many natural evils in a current state, the course of which he can neither stem nor divert: prudence shows him beforehand the means he may use to step out of their way, and hide himself. The simple—the inexperienced, headstrong, giddy, and foolish—rush on in the career of hope, without prudence to regulate, chastise, and guide it; thus they commit many faults, make many miscarriages, and suffer often in consequence; and the commission of crimes leads to punishment.

Verse 5. Thorns and snares] Various difficulties, trials, and sufferings.

Verse 6. Train up a child in the way he should go] The Hebrew of this clause is curious: חנך לנער על פי דרכו chanoch lannaar al pi dareo, "Initiate the child at the opening (the mouth) of his path." When he comes to the opening of the way of life, being able to walk alone, and to choose; stop at this entrance, and begin a series of instructions, how he is to conduct himself in every step he takes. Show him the duties, the dangers, and the blessings of the path; give him directions how to perform the duties, how to escape the dangers, and how to secure the blessings, which all lie before him. Fix these on his mind by daily inculcation, till their impression is become indelible; then lead him to practise by slow and almost imperceptible degrees, till each indelible impression becomes a strongly radicated habit. Beg incessantly the blessing of God on all this teaching and discipline; and then you have obeyed the injunction of the wisest of men. Nor is there any likelihood that such impressions shall ever be effaced, or that such habits shall ever be destroyed.

חנך chanoch, which we translate train up or initiate, signifies also dedicate; and is often used for the consecrating any thing, house, or person, to the service of God. Dedicate, therefore, in the first instance, your child to God; and nurse, teach, and discipline him as God's child, whom he has intrusted to your care. These things observed, and illustrated by your own conduct, the child (you have God's word for it) will never depart from the path of life. Coverdale translates the passage thus: "Yf thou teachest a childe what waye he shoulde go, he shall not leave it when he is olde." Coverdale's Bible, for generally giving the true sense of a passage, and in elegant language for the time, has no equal in any of the translations which have followed since. HORACE's maxim is nearly like that of Solomon:—

Fingit equum tenera docilem cervice magister
Ire viam, quam monstrat eques; venaticus, ex quo
Tempore cervinam pellem latravit in aula, Militat in sylvis catulus. Nunc adhibe puro

To move obedient to his rider's will.

Through the wild woods. Thus, in your hour of youth
From pure instruction quaff the words of truth:
The odours of the wine that first shall stain
The virgin vessel, it shall long retain." FRANCIS.

Verse 7. The rich ruleth over the poor] So it is in the order of God, and may be a blessing to both.

Verse 8. He that soweth iniquity] The crop must be according to the seed. If a man sow thistle seed, is it likely he shall reap wheat? If he sow to the flesh, shall he not of the flesh reap destruction?

Verse 9. A bountiful eye] One that disposes him to help all that he sees to be in want; the bountiful eye means the bountiful heart; for the heart looks through the eye. The merciful heart, even when the hand has little or nothing to give, shall be blessed of the Lord.

Verse 11. He that loveth pureness of heart] Who aims to be what God would have him to be—the King of kings shall be his Friend. There is no class of men that value uprightness more than kings; as none stand so much in need of it in their servants.

videnecy) preserve knowledge.] This providence has been wonderfully manifested in preserving the sacred oracles, and in preserving many ancient authors, which have been of great use to the civil interests of man.

Verse 13. The slothful man saith, There is a lion without] But why does he say so? Because he is a slothful man. Remove his slothfulness, and these imaginary difficulties and dangers will be no more. He will not go abroad to work in the fields, because he thinks there is a lion in the way; he will not go out into the town for employment, as he fears to be assassinated in the streets! From both these circumstances he seeks total cessation from activity.

Verse 14. The mouth of strange women is a deep pit] In chap. xxiii. 27, he says, A whore is a DEEP DITCH, and a strange woman is a NARROW PIT. The allusions in these three places are too plain to be misunderstood. Virgil's hell has been adduced in illustration:—

—Sate sanguine Divum,
Tros Anchisiade, faeilis decensus Averni;
Noctes atque dies patet atri janua Ditis:
Sed revocare gradum, superasque evadere ad auras, delivered; the nature of the instruction, and the end for which it was given.

I shall give a paraphrase of this very important passage:—

1. Solomon addresses his pupils on the use of his past teachings. See on ver. 6.

1. The wise man speaks; and all his words, not merely his sentiments, are to be carefully heard.

2. He speaks knowledge—gives doctrines true in themselves, and confirmed by observation and experience.

3. These are to be heard with humility and deep attention: "Bow down thine ear."

4. They must not only be heard, but meditated and pondered: "Apply thine heart to my knowledge."

Verse 18. For it is a pleasant thing if thou keep them within thee]

II. The pleasure and profit which may be derived from an attentive hearing.

1. They should be laid up in the heart—stored, treasured up within thee.

2. This will yield high satisfaction and happiness to the soul: "For it is a pleasant thing if thou keep them within thee."

3. The man who thus attends to the teachings of wisdom shall gain an experimental knowledge of them, so as to be able to speak of them suitably, pertinently, and persuasively: "They shall withal be fitted in thy lips."

Verse 19. That thy trust may be in the LORD, I have made known, &c.]

III. The end for which the wise man gives these instructions:—

1. "That thy trust may be in the LORD." That thou mayest acknowledge Him as the Fountain of all good; and refer every thing to him.

2. That this end may be accomplished, the instructions are specific and particular: "I have made known to thee, even to thee."

3. And this has not only been done in times past, "I have made known:" but even in the present, "I have made known this day!"

IV. An appeal is made to the person himself relative to the matter and importance of the teaching.

1. "Have I not written to thee excellent things;" שְׁלִישִׁים shalishim, literally threefold, thrice, in three different ways; which some think refers to his three books:—1. Canticles. 2. Kohleth, or Ecclesiastes. And 3. Proverbs.

Others, understanding it of the voice of Divine wisdom, suppose the three grand divisions of the sacred oracles are intended; viz., 1. The Law; 2. The Prophets; and 3. The Hagiographa. And others interpret it of the three grand intellectual sciences:—1. Morality, or Ethics. 2. Natural Philosophy, or Physics. 3. Theology, or the science of Divine things as reported in the Scriptures. But Solomon's books of Natural Philosophy are lost.

And lastly, some of the rabbins and some Christians find in these shalishim the three senses of Scripture: 1. Literal; 2. Figurative; and 3. Allegorical.

After all, as we know the term thrice was used as the term seven, a certain number for an uncertain, (see Amos i. 11; 2 Cor. xii. 8,) it may mean no more here than, I have written to thee often. But perhaps it is safer to apply it to the Scriptures, and the excellent doctrines they contain: for שְׁלִישִׁים shalishim signifies also excellent, princely things; things which become a king to speak. Indeed, it would not be difficult to prove that there is not one important art or science which is not alluded to in the Holy Scriptures, and used to illustrate and inculcate heavenly truths.

2. These excellent, princely, or threefold teachings, consist of two grand parts: 1. COUNSELS, מַעֲצוֹת moetsoth, from מַעַץ yaatz, to give advice, counsel, or information. These (1) show thee what thou shouldst know; and (2) advise thee what thou shouldst do. 2. KNOWLEDGE, דַּעַת daath, from יָדַע yada, to perceive, or feel, by means of the senses and internal perception; viz., what should be felt, experienced, known to be true by mental perception, and by their influence on the heart and affections.

V. All this is done to give the pupil the fullest satisfaction, and most plenary evidence concerning the truths of God.

Verse 21. That I might make thee know the certainty of the words of truth]

1. These are words or doctrines of truth: 1. They are true in themselves. 2. Come from the God of truth. 3. Are truly fulfilled to all that believe.

2. These words of truth are certain, קֶשֶׁט koshet, they are not of dubious or difficult interpretation;

23 <sup>k</sup> For the LORD will plead their cause, and spoil the soul of those that spoiled them.

24 Make no friendship with an angry man; and with a furious man thou shalt not go:

25 Lest thou learn his ways, and get a snare to thy soul.

26 <sup>l</sup> Be not thou one of them that strike hands, or of them that are sureties for debts.

27 If thou hast nothing to pay, why should

they point directly to the great end for which God gave them; they promise, and they are fulfilled. He who pleads them by faith, receives their accomplishment in the spirit and power of Divine love. The Scriptures, as far as they concern the salvation of the soul, are to be experimentally understood; and, by this experimental knowledge, every believer has the witness in himself, and knows the certainty of the words of truth.

VI. What we know ourselves to be true, and of infinite importance to the welfare of men in general, we should carefully proclaim and witness, that they also may believe.

That thou mightest answer the words of truth] 1. When the doctrine of salvation is preached, there will be many inquirers. What is this doctrine? Have any persons received these blessings—the remission of sins, witness of the Holy Spirit, purification of the heart, &c., &c.? Who are they? What are the collateral arguments that prove these things, and show us that you have not misapprehended the meaning of these Scriptures? 2. Inquiries of this kind should meet with the speediest and most distinct answers; and the doctrines of truth should be supported and illustrated with the words of truth. "That thou mightest answer the words of truth to them that send unto thee."

Verse 22. Neither oppress the afflicted in the gate] In judgment let the poor have a fair hearing; and let him not be borne down because he is poor. The reader has often seen that courts of justice were held at the gates of cities in the East.

Verse 23. For the Lord will plead their cause] Wo therefore to them that oppress them, for they will have God, not the poor, to deal with.

Verse 24. Make no friendship with an angry man] Spirit has a wonderful and unaccountable influence upon spirit. From those with whom we associate we acquire habits, and learn their ways, imbibe their spirit, show their tempers, and walk in their steps. We cannot be too choice of our company, for we may soon learn ways that will be a snare to our soul:

does, is it not a fraud on the very face of the transaction !

Why should he take away thy bed from under thee ?] The creditor will not pursue the debtor whom he knows to be worth nothing; but he will sue the bail or bondsman. And why shouldst thou put thyself in such circumstances as to expose thyself to the loss even of thy bed !

Verse 28. Remove not the ancient landmark] Do not take the advantage, in ploughing or breaking up a field contiguous to that of thy neighbour, to set the dividing stones farther into his field than thou mayest enlarge thy own. Take not what is not thy own in any case. Let all ancient divisions, and the usages connected with them, be held sacred. Bring in no new dogmas, nor rites, nor ceremonies, into religion, or the worship of God, that are not clearly laid down in the sacred writings. "Stand in the way; and see, and ask for the old paths, which is the good way, and walk therein; and ye shall find rest for your souls;" Jer. vi. 16. But if any Church have lost sight of the genuine doctrines of the Gospel, calling them back to these is not removing the ancient landmarks, as some have falsely asserted. God gave a law against removing the ancient landmarks, by which the inheritances of tribes and families were distinguished. See Deut. xix. 14, from which these words of Solomon appear to be taken.

Even among the heathens the landmark was sacred; so sacred that they made a deity of it. Terminus signifies the stone or post that served as a landmark. And Terminus was reputed a god, and had offerings made to him. Hence Ovid :—

Here we find the owners of both fields bringing each his garland and libation to the honour of this god. They sung its praises, put on its top a chaplet of flowers, poured out the libation before it; and the inhabitants of the country held a festival in its honour. It was, in short, celebrated as the preserver of the bounds and territorial rights of tribes, cities, and whole kingdoms; and without its testimony and evidence, every field would have been a subject of litigation.

Sobriety in eating and drinking, especially at the tables of the great. Have no fellowship with the covetous. Remove not the ancient landmark. Children should receive due correction. Avoid the company of wine-bibbers. Obedience to parents. Avoid lewd connections. The effect of an unfeeling conscience.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXIII.

Verse 1. When thou sittest to eat with a ruler] When invited to the table of thy betters, eat moderately. Do not appear as if half starved at home. Eat not of delicacies to which thou art not accustomed; they are deceitful meat; they please, but they do not profit. They are pleasant to the sight, the taste, and the smell; but they are injurious to health.

3 Be not desirous of his dainties : for they are deceitful meat.

forget the poor, else God's curse will be a canker even in thy gold.

Cease from thine own wisdom.] בִּינָתָךְ binatthecha, thy own understanding or prudence. The world says, “Get rich if thou canst, and how thou canst.” Rem, si possis, recte; si non, quocunque modo rem; “Get a fortune honestly if thou canst; but if not, get one at all events.” This is the devil's counsel, and well it is followed; but Solomon says, and God says, “Cease from thine own counsel.” Thou hast an immortal soul, and shalt shortly appear before God. Lay up treasure for heaven, and be rich towards God.

Verse 6. Of him that hath an evil eye] Never eat with a covetous or stingy man; if he entertains you at his own expense, he grudges every morsel you put your mouth. This is well marked by the wise man in the next verse: “Eat and drink, saith he:
but his heart is not with thee.”

Verse 8. The morsel which thou hast eaten] On reflection thou wilt even blame thyself for having accepted his invitation.

childless, in order to preserve the family. The strength here mentioned refers to the justness of his claim, the extent of his influence, and the powerful abettors of such a cause. But in reference to the orphans here mentioned, they having no kinsman, God takes up, vindicates, and avenges their cause.

Verse 14. Thou shalt beat him with the rod] A proper correction of children was a favourite point of discipline with Solomon. We have already seen how forcibly he speaks on this subject. See the notes on the places referred to in the margin.

Verse 18. Surely there is an end] יֵשׁ אַחֲרָיִת yesh
acharith, there is another life; “and thy expectation” of the enjoyment of a blessed immortality “shall not be cut off.” The Old MS. Bible reads thus: For thou shalt have hope in the last; and thou abiding shalt not be taken away. “For the end is not yet come;
and thy patient abiding shall not be in vain.”— COVERDALE.

Verse 20. Be not among winebibbers] There is much of this chapter spent in giving directions concerning eating, drinking, and entertainments in general.
First, the pupil is directed relative to the manner in which he is to conduct himself in his visits to the tables of the rich and great. 2. Relative to the covetous, and his intercourse with them. And 3. To public entertainments, where there were generally riot and debauch. The reasons, says Calmét, which induced the wise man to give these directions were, 1. The useless expense. 2. The loss of time. 3. The danger from bad company. And 4. The danger of contracting irregular habits, and of being induced to lead a voluptuous and effeminate life.

Verse 22. Despise not thy mother when she is old.] A very necessary caution, as very old women are generally helpless, useless, and burdensome: yet these circumstances do not at all lessen the child's duty. And this duty is strengthened by the Divine command here given.

Verse 23. Buy the truth] Acquire the knowledge of God at all events; and in order to do this, too much pains, industry, and labour, cannot be expended.

And sell it not] When once acquired, let no consideration deprive thee of it. Cleave to and guard it, even at the risk of thy life. Coverdale translates: "Labour for to get the treuth; sell not away wissdome."

Verse 26. My son, give me thine heart] This is the speech of God to every human soul; give thy affections to God, so as to love him with all thy heart, soul, mind, and strength.

And let thine eyes observe my ways.] Be obedient to me in all things. My son, thou believest that I AM, and that I AM the Fountain of all good. Give me thy heart; it is I alone who can make thee happy. Observe my ways—follow me; do what is right in my sight. This exhortation contains three words: BELIEVE, LOVE, OBEY! This is the sum of God's counsels to every child of man.

Verse 27. For a whore is a deep ditch] See on chap. xxii. 14.

Verse 28. Increaseth the transgressors among men.] More iniquity springs from this one source of evil, than from any other cause in the whole system of sin. Women and strong drink cause many millions to transgress.

Verse 29. Who hath wo?] I believe Solomon refers here to the natural effects of drunkenness. And perhaps וי oi, which we translate wo, and אבוי aboi, which we translate sorrow, are mere natural sounds or vociferations that take place among drunken men, either from illness, or the nauseating effects of too much liquor. As to contentions among such; babblings on a variety of subjects, which they neither understand nor are fit to discuss; wounds, got by falling out about nothing; and red eyes, bloodshot with excess of drink, or black and blue eyes with fighting;—these are such common and general effects of these computations, as naturally to follow from them. So that they who tarry long at wine, and use mixed wine to make it more inebriating, (see chap. ix. 2,) are the very persons who are most distinguished by the circumstances enumerated above. I need scarcely add, that by wine and mixed wine all inebriating liquors are to be understood.

Verse 31. Look not thou upon the wine] Let neither the colour, the odour, the sparkling, &c., of the wine, when poured out, induce thee to drink of it. However good and pure it may be, it will to thee be a snare, because thou art addicted to it, and hast no self-command.

Verse 33. Thine eyes shall behold strange women] Evil concupiscence is inseparable from drunkenness. Mr. Herbert shows these effects well:—

He that is drunken may his mother kill,
Big with his sister: he hath lost the reins;
Is outlawed by himself. All kinds of ill
Did, with his liquor, slide into his veins.
The drunkard forfeits man; and doth divest
All worldly right, save what he hath by beast.

HERBERT'S Poems.—The Church Porch.

Verse 34. Lieth down in the midst of the sea] He is utterly regardless of life; which is expressed very forcibly by one in a state of intoxication ascending the shrouds, clasping the mast-head, and there falling asleep; whence, in a few moments, he must either fall down upon the deck and be dashed to pieces, or fall into the sea and be drowned. Reader, if thou be a man given to this appetite, put a knife to thy throat.

Verse 35. They have stricken me] Though beat and abused, full of pain, and exhibiting a frightful figure; yet so drunk was he, as to be insensible who had struck him: still, after all this abuse and disgrace, he purposes to embrace the next opportunity of repeating his excesses! SIN makes a man contemptible in life, miserable in death, and wretched to all eternity. Is it not strange, then, that men should LOVE it!

NOTES ON CHAP. XXIV.

Verse 3. Through wisdom is a house builded] That is, a family; household affairs. See the notes on chap. ix. 1, &c.

Verse 5. A wise man is strong] His wisdom enables him to construct a great variety of machines, by which, under his own influence, he can do the labour of a hundred or even a thousand men. But in all cases wisdom gives power and influence; and he who is wise to salvation can overcome even Satan himself. The Septuagint has: "The wise is better than the strong; and the man who has prudence, than a stout husbandman."

Verse 6. By wise counsel thou shalt make thy war] See note on chap. xx. 18.

Verse 7. A fool—openeth not his mouth in the gate.] Is not put into public offices of trust and responsibility.

Verse 9. The thought of foolishness is sin] זמַת חטאת אֵוֶלֶת zimmath iveleth chattath. "The device of folly is transgression;" or, "an evil purpose is sinful;" or, perhaps more literally, "the device of the foolish is sin." It has been variously understood by the versions.

"The cunning of the fool is sin."—Targum.

"The imprudent man (or fool, ἀφρων) shall die in sins."—Septuagint.

So the Arabic.

The thinking of the fool is sin.—Old MS. Bible.

Fool is here taken for a wicked man, who is not only evil in his actions, but every thought of his heart is evil, and that continually. A simple thought about foolishness, or about sin itself, is not sinful; it is the purpose or device, the harbouring evil thoughts, and devising how to sin, that is criminal.

Verse 10. If thou faint] If thou give way to discouragement and despair in the day of adversity—time of trial or temptation.

Thy strength is small.] צַר כֹּחַךְ tsar cochachah, thy strength is contracted. So the old MS. Bible excellently: אַל תִּשְׁכַּח תְּהִי אֲפֶסֶק, in the day of angusts, schal be made littl thy strength. In times of trial we should endeavour to be doubly courageous, when a man loses his courage, his strength avails him nothing.

Verse 11. If thou forbear to deliver] If thou seest the innocent taken by the hand of lawless power or superstitious zeal, and they are about to be put to death, thou shouldst rise up in their behalf, boldly plead for them, testify to their innocence when thou knowest it; and thus thou wilt not be guilty of blood; which thou wouldest be, if, through any pretence, thou shouldst neglect to save the life of a man unjustly condemned.

Verse 13. And the honey-comb] I have often had occasion to remark how much finer the flavour of honey is in the honey-comb than it is after it has been expressed from it, and exposed to the action of the air. But it has been asserted that the honey-comb is never eaten; it must be by those who have no acquaintance with the apiary. I have seen the comb with its contained honey eaten frequently, and of it I have repeatedly partaken. And that our Lord ate it, is evident from Luke xxiv. 42. Nor can any man who has not eaten it in this way feel the full force of the allusions to the honey-comb and its sweetness in several parts of the sacred writings. See 1 Sam. xiv. 27; Psa. xix. 10; Prov. v. 3; xvi. 24; xxvii. 7; Cant. iv. 11; v. 1; and the place before us.

Verse 14. So shall the knowledge of wisdom be unto thy soul] True religion, experimental godliness, shall be to thy soul as the honey-comb is to thy mouth.

Then there shall be a reward, and thy expectation shall not be cut off.] This is precisely the same with that in the preceding chapter, ver. 18, where see the note. The word אחרית acharith, we translate in the former place an end, and here we translate it a reward; but there is no place I believe in the sacred writings in which it has any such acceptation; nor can such a meaning be deduced from the root אחר achar, which always refers to behind, after, extremity, latter part, time, &c., but never carries the idea of recompense, compensation, or such like; nor has one of the versions understood it so. There is another state or life, and thy expectation of happiness in a future world shall not be cut off. In this sense the versions all understood it. I will take them as they lie before me.

“Which (wisdom) when thou shalt have found, thou shalt have hope in thy last days; and thy hope shall not perish.”—Vulgate.

“And if thou find it, thou shalt have a good death; and hope shall not forsake thee.”—Septuagint.

“Which, if thou have found, thy latter days shall be better than the former; and thy hope shall not be consumed.”—Chaldee.

“There shall be an end, and thy hope shall not be cut off.”—Syriac.

This rendering is indefinite, which is not the usual custom of the translator.

Verse 15. The dwelling of the righteous] צדיק tsaddik, the man who is walking unblameably in all the testimonies of God; who is rendering to every man his due.

Verse 16. For a just man] צדיק tsaddik, the righteous, the same person mentioned above.

Falleth seven times] Gets very often into distresses through his resting place being spoiled by the wicked man, the robber, the spoiler of the desert, lying in wait for this purpose, ver. 15.

And riseth up again] Though God permit the hand of violence sometimes to spoil his tent, temptations to assail his mind, and afflictions to press down his body, he constantly emerges; and every time he passes through the furnace, he comes out brighter and more refined.

But the wicked shall fall into mischief.] And there they shall lie; having no strong arm to uphold them. Yet,

Verse 17. Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth, (into this mischief,) and let not thine heart be glad when he stumbleth] When he meets with any thing that injures him; for God will not have thee to avenge thyself, or feel any disposition contrary to love; for if thou do, the Lord will be angry, and may turn away his wrath from him, and pour it out on thee.

This I believe to be the true sense of these verses: but we must return to the sixteenth, as that has been most sinfully misrepresented.

For a just man falleth seven times.—That is, say many, “the most righteous man in the world sins seven times a day on an average.” Solomon does not say so:—1. There is not a word about sin in the text. 2. The word day is not in the Hebrew text, nor in any of the versions. 3. The word יפול yippol, from נפל naphal, to fall, is never applied to sin. 4. When set in opposition to the words riseth up, it merely applies to affliction or calamity. See Mic. vii. 8; Amos viii. 4; Jer. xxv. 27; and Psa. xxxiv. 19, 20. “The righteous falls into trouble.” See above.

Mr. Holden has a very judicious note on this passage: “Injure not a righteous man; for, though he frequently falls into distress, yet, by the superintending care of Providence, 'he riseth up again,' is delivered from his distress, while the wicked are overwhelmed with their misfortunes. That this is the meaning is plain from the preceding and following verses : yet some expound it by the just man often relapsing into sin, and recovering from it ; nay, it has even been adduced to prove the doctrine of the final perseverance of the elect. But נפל is never used for falling into sin, but into distress and affliction—as chap. xi. 5, 14 ; xiii. 17 ; xvii. 20 ; xxvi. 27 ; xxviii. 10, 14, 18."

Verse 18. And he turn away his wrath from him. Wrath is here taken for the effect of wrath, punishment ; and the meaning must be as paraphrased above—lest he take the punishment from him, and inflict it upon thee. And in this way Coverdale understood it : "Lest the Lorde be angry, and turn his wrath from him unto thee." Or we may understand it thus : Lest the Lord inflict on thee a similar punishment ; for if thou get into his spirit, rejoicing in the calamities of another, thou deservest punishment.

Verse 20. For there shall be no reward to the evil man אחרית acharith. There shall not be the future state of blessedness to the wicked. See the note on ver. 14. His candle shall be put out ; his prosperity shall finally cease, or he shall have no posterity. Some have thought that this text intimates the annihilation of sinners ; but it refers not to being, but to the state or condition of that being. The wicked shall be ; but they shall not be HAPPY.

culture was honourable, no man was respected who neglected to cultivate his grounds, who sunk into poverty, contracted debt, or engaged in ruinous securities. With great propriety, a principal part of wisdom was considered by them as consisting in the knowledge of properly conducting one's domestic affairs, and duly cultivating the inheritances derived from their ancestors. Moses had made a law to prevent the rich from utterly depressing the poor, by obliging them to return their farms to them on the Sabbatic year, and to remit all debts at the year of jubilee.

In the civil state of the Hebrews, we never see those enormous and suddenly raised fortunes, which never subsist but in the ruin of numberless families. One of the principal solicitudes of this legislator was to produce, as far as possible in a monarchical state, an equality of property and condition. The ancient Romans held agriculture in the same estimation, and highly respected those who had applied themselves to it with success. When they spoke in praise of a man, they considered themselves as giving no mean commendation when they called him a good husbandman, an excellent labourer. From such men they formed their most valiant generals and intrepid soldiers. CARO De Re Rustica, cap. 1. The property which is acquired by these means is most innocent, most solid, and exposes its possessor less to envy than property acquired in any other way. See CICERO De Officiis, lib. 1. In Britain the merchant is all in all; and yet the waves of the sea are not more uncertain, nor more tumultuous, than the property acquired in this way, or than the agitated life of the speculative merchant.

But let us look more particularly into this very instructive parable:—

I. The owner is described. 1. He was איש עצל ish atsel, the loitering, sluggish, slothful man. 2. He was אדם חסר לב adam chasar leb, a man that wanted heart; destitute of courage, alacrity, and decision of mind.

II His circumstances. This man had, 1st, שדה sadeh, a sowed field, arable ground. This was the character of his estate. It was meadow and corn land. 2. He had כרם kerem, a vineyard, what we would call perhaps garden and orchard, where he might employ his skill to great advantage in raising various kinds of fruits and culinary herbs for the support of his family.

III. The state of this heritage: 1. "It was grown over with thorns." It had been long neglected, so that even brambles were permitted to grow in the fields: 2. "Nettles had covered the face thereof." It was not weeded, and all kinds of rubbish had been suffered to multiply: 3. "The stone wall was broken down." This belonged to the vineyard: it was neither pruned nor digged; and the fence, for want of timely repairs, had all fallen into ruins, ver. 31.

IV. The effect all this had on the attentive observer. 1. I saw it, אחזה אנכי echezeh anochi, I fixed my attention on it. I found it was no mere report. It is a fact. I myself was an eyewitness of it. 2. I considered it well, אשית לבי ashith libbi, I put my heart on it. All my feelings were interested. 3. I looked upon it, רעיתי raithi, I took an intellectual view of it. And 4. Thus I received instruction, לקחתי כור lakachti musar, I received a very important lesson from it: but the owner paid no attention to it. He alone was uninstructed; for he "slumbered, slept, and kept his hands in his bosom." Ver. 33. "Hugged himself in his sloth and carelessness."

V. The consequences of this conduct. 1. Poverty described as coming like a traveller, making sure steps every hour coming nearer and nearer to the door. 2. Want, מכסר machsor, total destitution; want of all the necessities, conveniences, and comforts of life; and this is described as coming like an armed man כנש כחש keish magen, as a man with a shield, who comes to destroy this unprofitable servant: or it may refer to a man armed with what we call an execution into the house, coming with the law, to take even his bed from the slumberer.

From this literal solution any minister of God may make a profitable discourse.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXV.

Verse 1. These are also proverbs of Solomon] In my old MS. Bible, this verse concludes the preceding chapter. It seems that the remaining part of this book contains proverbs which had been collected by the order of King Hezekiah, and were added to the preceding book as a sort of supplement, having been collected from traditionary sayings of Solomon. And as the men of Hezekiah may mean Isaiah, Shcna, and other inspired men, who lived in that time, we may consider them as of equal authority with the rest, else such men could not have united them to the sacred book. The chronological notes in the margin of this and the five following chapters denote the time when the proverbs contained in them were collected together in the reign of Hezekiah, about two hundred and seventy years after the death of Solomon.

Verse 2. It is the glory of God to conceal a thing] This has been understood as referring to the revelation of God's will in his word, where there are many things concealed in parables, allegories, metaphors, similitudes, &c. And it is becoming the majesty of God so to publish his will, that it must be seriously studied to be understood, in order that the truth may be more prized when it is discovered. And if it be God's glory thus partially to conceal his purposes, it is the glory of a king to search and examine this word, that he may understand how by Him kings reign and princes decree judgment. Prophecies are partially concealed; and we cannot fully know their meaning till their accomplishment; and then the glory of God's wisdom and providence will be more particularly evident, when we see the event correspond so particularly and exactly with the prediction. I know not, however, that there are not matters in the Book of God that will not be fully opened till mortality is swallowed up of life. For here we see through a glass darkly; but there, face to face; here we know in part; but there we shall know as we also are known.

On this subject I cannot withhold an extract of a letter sent to myself, by a royal and learned personage.*

"As far as I have presumed to dive into and occupy myself with the sacred volumes, I feel satisfied of their Divine origin and truth. And I am satisfied, likewise, that they contain more matter than any one, and myself in particular, can ever aspire fully to understand. This belief, however, ought in nowise to slacken our diligence, or damp our ardour, in attempting a constant pursuit after the attainment of knowledge and truth; as we may flatter ourselves, although unable to reach the gate, we are still approaching nearer to its portals, which of itself is a great blessing." This sentiment will be approved by every pious and enlightened mind.

Verse 3. The heaven for height] The simple meaning of this is, the reasons of state, in reference to many acts of the executive government, can no more be fathomed by the common people, than the height of the heavens and the depth of the earth.

Verse 4. Take away the dross from the silver] You cannot have a pure silver vessel till you have purified the silver; and no nation can have a king a public blessing till the wicked—all bad counsellors, wicked and interested ministers, and sycophants—are banished from the court and cabinet. When the wise and good only are the king's ministers and advisers, then the throne will be established in righteousness, and his administration be a universal blessing.

Verse 7. Come up hither] Our Lord refers to this see Luke xiv. 8, and the notes there. Be humble affect not high things; let those who are desperate climb dangerous precipices; keep thyself quiet, and thou shalt live at ease, and in peace. Hear the speech of a wise heathen on this subject:—

Quid fuit, ut tutas agitare Dædalus alas;

Icarus immensas nomine signet aquas?

Nempe quod hic alte, dimissus ille volabat.

Nam pennas ambo nomine habuere suas?

Crede mihi; bene qui latuit, bene vixit; et infra

Fortunam debet quisque manere suam.

Vive sine invidia; mollesce inglorius annos

Exige: amicitias et tibi junge pares.

OVID, Trist. lib. iii., El. 4, ver. 21.

"Why was it that Dædalus winged his way safely, while Icarus his son fell, and gave name to the Icarian sea? Was it not because the son flew aloft, and the father skimmed the ground? For both were furnished with the same kind of wings. Take my word for it, that he who lives privately lives safely; and every one should live within his own income. Envy no man; pray for a quiet life, though it should not be dignified. Seek a friend, and associate with thy equals."

Verse 8. Go not forth hastily to strive] לרִיב lerib, to enter into a lawsuit. Keep from this pit of the bottomless deep, unless urged by the direst necessity.

Verse 9. Debate thy cause with thy neighbour] Take the advice of friends. Let both sides attend to their counsels; but do not tell the secret of thy business to any. After squandering your money away upon lawyers, both they and the judge will at last leave it to be settled by twelve of your fellow citizens! O the folly of going to law! O the blindness of men, and the rapacity of unprincipled lawyers!

On this subject I cannot but give the following extract from Sir John Hawkins's Life of Dr. Johnson, which he quotes from Mr. Selwin, of London: "A man who deliberates about going to law should have, 1. A good cause; 2. A good purse; 3. A good skilful attorney; 4. Good evidence; 5. Good able counsel; 6. A good upright judge; 7. A good intelligent jury; and with all these on his side, if he have not, 8. Good luck, it is odds but he miscarries in his suit." O the glorious uncertainty of the law!

Verse 11. A word fitly spoken] אֵל אֲפַנִּי al ophan-nai, upon its wheels. An observation, caution, reproof, or advice, that comes in naturally, runs smoothly along, is not forced nor dragged in, that appears to be without design, to rise out of the conversation, and though particularly relative to one point, will appear to the company to suit all.

[Is like apples of gold in pictures of silver.] Is like the refreshing orange or beautiful citron, served up in open work or filigree baskets, made of silver. The Asiatics excel in filigree silver work. I have seen much of it, and it is exquisitely beautiful. The silver wire by which it is done they form into the appearance of numerous flowers; and though these wires are soldered everywhere at their junctions with each other, yet this is done with such delicacy and skill as to be scarcely perceptible. I have seen animals formed of this filigree work, with all their limbs, and every joint in its natural play. Fruit-baskets are made also in this way, and are exquisitely fine. The wise man seems to have this kind of work particularly in view; and the contrast of the golden yellow fruit in the exquisitely wrought silver basket, which may be all termed picture work, has a fine and pleasing effect upon the eye, as the contained fruit has upon the palate at an entertainment in a sultry climate. So the word spoken judiciously and opportunely is as much in its place, as the golden apples in the silver baskets.

of fine gold, so is a wise re-

Verse 12. As an ear-ring of gold] I believe נִזְנֶה nezem to mean the nose-ring with its pendants; the left nostril is pierced, and a ring put through it, as in the ear. This is very common in almost every part of the East, among women of condition. This is a farther illustration of the above metaphor.

Verse 13. As the cold of snow] That snow was frequent in Judea, is well known; and that in the East they have snow-houses—places dug under ground, where they lay up snow for summer use—is also a fact. By means of the mass of snow deposited in them the icy temperature is kept up, so that the snow is easily preserved. The common method of cooling their wine, which is as easy as it is effectual, is by dipping a cloth in water, wrapping it round the bottle, and then hanging the bottle in the heat of the sun. The strong evaporation carries off the caloric from the wine, and the repetition of the wet cloth in the same exposure, makes the wine almost as cold as ice.

How agreeable this must be in a burning climate, may be easily conceived. Perhaps it is this to which the wise man refers; for it is a fact that they could have no snow in harvest, unless such as had been preserved as mentioned above; but this could be only in a few places, and within the reach of a very few persons. But cooling their liquors by the simple mode of evaporation already explained, was within the reach even of the labourers in the harvest field. I think the text favours this supposition; for כֶּסֶם שֶׁלֵג ketsinnath sheleg, need not be referred to snow itself procuring cold, but to a coldness like that of snow, procured by evaporation. If this interpretation be allowed, all difficulty will be removed.

Verse 14. A false gift] מַתַּת שָׁקֶר mattath shaker, a lying gift, one promised, but never bestowed. "Whoso maketh greates boasts, and giveth nothing;" COVERDALE. So the VULGATE: "Vir gloriosus, et promissa non complens;" "A bragging man, who does not fulfil his promises," is like clouds which appear to be laden with vapour, and like the wind which, though it blow from a rainy quarter, brings no moistness with it. So the vain boaster; he is big with promise, but performs nothing.

Verse 15. A soft tongue breaketh the bone.] This Verse 16. Hast thou found honey ?] Make a moderate use of all thy enjoyments. “ Let thy moderation be known unto all, and appear in all things.”

Verse 17. Withdraw thy foot] Another proverb will illustrate this : “ Too much familiarity breeds contempt.”

Verse 20. As vinegar upon nitre] The original word נתר nather is what is known among chemists as the natron of the ancients and of the Scriptures, and carbonate of soda. It is found native in Syria and India, and occurs as an efflorescence on the soil. In Tripoli it is found in crystalline incrustations of from one third to half an inch thick. It is found also in solution in the water of some lakes in Egypt and Hungary. The borders of these lakes are covered with crystalline masses, of a grayish white or light brown colour ; and in some specimens the natron is nearly pure carbonate of soda, and the carbonate is easily discovered by effervescing with an acid. It appears to have its Hebrew name from נתר nathar, to dissolve or loosen : because a solution of it in water is abstersive, taking out spots, &c. It is used in the East for the purposes of washing. If vinegar be poured on it, Dr. Shaw says a strong fermentation immediately takes place, which illustrates what Solomon says here : “ The singing of songs to a heavy heart is like vinegar upon natron :” that is, “ there is no affinity between them ; and opposition, colluctation, and strife, are occasioned by any attempt to unite them.”

And pourest vinegar upon chafke.—COVERDALE. This also will occasion an effervescence. See Jer. ii. 22.

Verse 22. Thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head] Not to consume, but to melt him into kindness ; a metaphor taken from smelting metallic ores :—

So artists melt the sullen ore of lead,
By heaping coals of fire upon its head :
In the kind warmth the metal learns to glow,
And pure from dross the silver runs below.

S. WESLEY.

Verse 23. The north wind driveth away rain] The margin has, “ The north wind bringeth forth rain.” It is said that the “ north wind brings forth rain at Jerusalem, because it brings with it the vapours arising from the sea that lies north of it.” The marginal is the true reading ; and is supported by the Chaldee, Syriac, and Septuagint ; but the Arabic reads south wind.

A backbiting tongue] A hidden tongue.

Verse 24. It is better to dwell in a corner] See the note on chap. xxi. 9.

Verse 27. It is not good to eat much honey] Coverdale translates the whole passage thus : “ Like as it is not good to eat to much honey ; even so, he that wyll search out hye thinges, it shal be to hevy for him.” As þe that etith myche honye, and it is not to him good ; so, that is a searcher of mageste, schal ben oppressid of gloure.—Old MS. Bible. He that searches too much into mysteries, is likely to be confounded by them. I really think this is the meaning of the place ; and shall not puzzle either myself or my reader with the discordant explanations which have been brought forward with the hope of illustrating this passage.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXVI.

Verse 1. As snow in summer] None of these is suitable to the time; and at this unsuitable time, both are unwelcome: so a fool to be in honour is unbecoming.

Verse 2. As the bird] צִפּוֹר tsippor is taken often for the sparrow; but means generally any small bird. As the sparrow flies about the house, and the swallow emigrates to strange countries; so an undeserved malediction may flutter about the neighbourhood for a season: but in a short time it will disappear as the bird of passage; and never take effect on the innocent person against whom it was pronounced.

Verse 3. A whip for the horse] Correction is as suitable to a fool, as a whip is for a horse, or a bridle for an ass.

Verse 4. Answer not a fool] On this and the following verse Bishop Warburton, who has written well on many things, and very indifferently on the doctrine of grace, has written with force and perspicuity: "Had this advice been given simply, and without circumstance, to answer the fool, and not to answer him, one who had reverence for the text would satisfy himself in supposing that the different directions referred to the doing a thing in and out of season; 1. The reason given why a fool should not be answered according to his folly, is, "lest he (the answerer) should be like unto him." 2. The reason given why the fool should be answered according to his folly, is, "lest he (the fool) should be wise in his own conceit."

"1. The cause assigned for forbidding to answer, therefore, plainly insinuates that the defender of religion should not imitate the insulter of it in his modes of disputation, which may be comprised in sophistry, buffoonery, and scurrility.

"2. The cause assigned for directing to answer, as plainly intimates that the sage should address himself to confute the fool upon his own false principles, by showing that they lead to conclusions very wide from, very opposite to, those impieties he would deduce from them. If any thing can allay the fool's vanity,

5 <sup>d</sup> Answer a fool according to his folly, lest he be wise in <sup>e</sup> his own conceit.

6 He that sendeth a message by the hand of a fool cutteth off the feet, and drinketh <sup>f</sup> damage.

7 The legs of the lame <sup>g</sup> are not equal: so is a parable in the mouth of fools.

8 <sup>h</sup> As he that bindeth a stone in a sling, so is he that giveth honour to a fool.

his own eyes.—<sup>f</sup> Or, violence.—<sup>g</sup> Heb. are lifted up.—<sup>h</sup> O! As he that putteth a precious stone in a heap of stones.

and prevent his being wise in his own conceit, it must be the dishonour of having his own principles turned against himself, and shown to be destructive of his own conclusions."—Treatise on Grace. Preface.

Verse 6. Cutteth off the feet] Sending by such a person is utterly useless. My old MS. Bible translates well: Walt in feet and drinkint wickednesse that sendith wordis bi a foole messenger. Nothing but lameness in himself can vindicate his sending it by such hands; and, after all, the expedient will be worse than the total omission, for he is likely to drink wickedness, i. e., the mischief occasioned by the fool's misconduct. Coverdale nearly hits the sense as usual: "He is lame of his fete, yee dronken is he in vanite, that committeth eny thinge to a foole."

Verse 8. As he that bindeth a stone in a sling, so is he that giveth honour to a fool.] It is entirely thrown away. This, however, is a difficult proverb; and the versions give but little light on the subject. The Hebrew may be translated, "As a piece of precious stone among a heap of stones, so is he that giveth honour to a fool." See the margin, and Parkhurst: but on this interpretation the meaning would rather be, "It is as useless to throw a jewel among a heap of stones to increase its bulk, as to give honour to a fool."

As he that sendith a stoon into a hepe of monce; so be that gebeth to an unwiseman wischip.—Old MS. Bible.

"He that setteth a foole in hye dignite, that is even as yf a man dyd caste a precious stone upon the galous."—Coverdale. This translator refers to the custom of throwing a stone to the heap under which a criminal lay buried. The Vulgate gives some countenance to this translation: "He who gives honour to a fool is like one who throws a stone to Mercury's heap." Mercury was considered the deity who presided over the highways; and stones were erected in different places to guide the traveller. Hence those lines of Dr. Young:—

"Death stands like Mercuries in every way;
And kindly points us to our journey's end."

I shall add that of Coverdale: "A man of experience discerneth all things well: but whoso hyreth a foole, hyreth soch one as wyl take no hede." The רב rab may mean either the great God, or a great man: hence the two renderings, in the text and in the margin.

Verse 11. As a dog returneth to his vomit] See note on 2 Pet. ii. 22.

Verse 13. The slothful man saith] See the note on chap. xxii. 13.

Verse 16. Than seven men that can render a reason.] Seven here only means perfection, abundance, or multitude. He is wiser in his own eyes than a multitude of the wisest men. "Than seven men that sytt and teach."—Coverdale; i. e., than seven doctors of the law, or heads of the schools of the prophets, who always sat while they taught.

Verse 17. He that passeth by] This proverb stands true ninety-nine times out of a hundred, where people meddle with domestic broils, or differences between men and their wives.

Verse 19. Am not I in sport?] How many hearts have been made sad, and how many reputations have been slain, by this kind of sport! "I designed no harm

Verse 20. Where no wood is, there the fire goeth out] The tale-receiver and the tale-bearer are the agents of discord. If none received the slander in the first instance, it could not be propagated. Hence our proverb, "The receiver is as bad as the thief." And our laws treat them equally; for the receiver of stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, is hanged, as well as he who stole them.

Verse 22. The words of a tale-bearer] The same with chap. xviii. 8, where see the note.

Verse 23. Burning lips and a wicked heart] Splendid, shining, smooth lips; that is, lips which make great professions of friendship are like a vessel plated over with base metal to make it resemble silver; but it is only a vile pot, and even the outside is not pure.

Verse 25. When he speaketh fair] For there are such hypocrites and false friends in the world.

Believe him not] Let all his professions go for nothing.

[For there are seven abominations in his heart.] That is, he is full of abominations.

Verse 27. Whoso diggeth a pit] See note on Psa. vii. 15. There is a Latin proverb like this: Malum consilium consultori pessimum, "A bad counsel, but worst to the giver." Harm watch; harm catch.

Verse 28. A lying tongue hateth those that are afflicted by it] He that injures another hates him in proportion to the injury he has done him; and, strange to tell, in proportion to the innocence of the oppressed. The debtor cannot bear the sight of his creditor; nor the knave, of him whom he has injured.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXVII.

Verse 1. Boast not thyself of to-morrow] See note on James iv. 13, &c. Do not depend on any future moment for spiritual good which at present thou needest, and God is willing to give, and without which, should death surprise thee, thou must be eternally lost; such as repentance, faith in Christ, the pardon of sin, the witness of the Holy Spirit, and complete renovation of soul. Be incessant in thy application to God for these blessings.

My old MS. Bible translates thus: Ne glorie thou into the morewenning. Here we see the derivation of our word morning; morewenning, from more, and wen or won, to dwell, i. e., a continuance of time to live or dwell in your present habitation. Every man wishes to live longer, and therefore wishes for to-morrow; and when to-morrow comes, then to-morrow, and so on.

Verse 2. Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth] We have a similar proverb, which illustrates this: "Self-praise is no commendation."

Verse 4. Who is able to stand before envy?] The rabbins have a curious story on this subject, and it has been formed by the moderns into a fable. There were two persons, one covetous and the other envious, to whom a certain person promised to grant whatever they should ask; but double to him who should ask last. The covetous man would not ask first, because he wished to get the double portion; and the envious man would not make the first request because he could not bear the thoughts of thus benefiting his neighbour. However, at last he requested that one of his eyes should be taken out, in order that his neighbour might lose both.

Verse 5. Open rebuke is better than secret love.] Plutarch gives an account of a man who, aiming a blow at his enemy's life, cut open an imposthume, which by a salutary discharge saved his life, that was sinking under a disease for which a remedy could not be found. Partial friendship covers faults; envy, malice, and revenge, will exhibit, heighten, and even multiply them. The former conceals us from ourselves; the latter shows us the worst part of our character. Thus we are taught the necessity of amendment and correction. In this sense open rebuke is better than secret love. Yet it is a rough medicine, and none can desire it. But the genuine open-hearted friend may be intended, who tells you your faults freely, but conceals them from all others; hence the sixth verse: "Faithful are the wounds of a friend."

Verse 8. As a bird that wandereth from her nest] Leaving her own brood, places of retreat, and feeding-ground behind, and going into strange countries, where she is exposed to every kind of danger. So is the man who leaves his family connections and country, and goes into strange parts to find employment, better his circumstances, make a fortune, &c. I have seen multitudes of such wanderers from their place come to great misery and wretchedness. God's general advice is, "Do good, and dwell in the land; and verily thou shalt be fed."

Verse 9. Ointment and perfume] Anointing the head and various parts of the body with aromatic oil is frequent in the East, and fumigating the beards of the guests at the conclusion of an entertainment is almost universal; as is also sprinkling rose-water, and water highly odoriferous. Two of the curious vessels which are used for this purpose are now before me; they hold some quarts each, and are beautifully inlaid with silver in the form of sprigs, leaves, &c.

Verse 10. Thine own friend] A well and long tried friend is invaluable. Him that has been a friend to thy family never forget, and never neglect. And, in the time of adversity, rather apply to such a one, than go to thy nearest relative, who keeps himself at a distance.

Verse 12. A prudent man foreseeeth the evil] The very same as chap. xxii. 3.

Verse 13. Take his garment] The same as chap. xx. 16.

Verse 14. He that blesseth his friend] He who makes loud and public protestations of acknowledgments to his friend for favours received, subjects his sincerity to suspicion; and remember the Italian proverb elsewhere quoted:—"He who praises you more than he was wont to do, has either deceived you, or is about to do it." Extravagant public professions are little to be regarded.

Verse 15. A continual dropping] See chap. xix. 13.

Verse 16. Whosoever hideth her hideth the wind] You may as well attempt to repress the blowing of the wind, as the tongue of a scold; and to conceal this unfortunate propensity of a wife is as impossible as to hush the storm, and prevent its sound from being heard.

The ointment of his right hand] You can no more conceal such a woman's conduct, than you can the smell of the aromatic oil with which your hand has been anointed. The Hebrew is very obscure, and is variously translated. Coverdale thus: "He that re-frayneth her, re-frayneth the wynde; and holdith oyle fast in his honde." That is, he attempts to do what is impossible to be done.

Verse 17. Iron sharpeneth iron] As hard iron, viz., steel, will bring a knife to a better edge when it is properly whetted against it: so one friend may be the means of exciting another to reflect, dive deeply into, and illustrate a subject, without which whetting or excitement, this had never taken place. Had Horace seen this proverb in the Septuagint translation when he wrote to the Pisos?

Ergo fungar vice cotis, acutum

Reddere quæ ferrum valet, exors ipsa secandi.

HOR. ARS. POET., ver. 304.

"But let me sharpen others, as the hone Gives edge to razors, though itself have none."

FRANCIS.

Verse 19. As in water face answereth to face] All men's hearts are pretty nearly alike; water is not more like to water, than one heart is to another. Or, as a man sees his face perfectly reflected by the water, when looking into it; so the wise and penetrating man sees generally what is in the heart of another by considering the general tenor of his words and actions.

"Surely, if each man saw another's heart There would be no commerce;

All would disperse,

And live apart."

HERBERT.

Verse 20. Hell and destruction are never full] How hideous must the soul of a covetous man be, when God compares it to hell and perdition!

The eyes of man are never satisfied.] As the grave can never be filled up with bodies, nor perdition with souls; so the restless desire, the lust of power, riches, and splendour, is never satisfied. Out of this ever unsatisfied desire spring all the changing fashions, the varied amusements, and the endless modes of getting money, prevalent in every age, and in every country

Verse 21. As the fining pot for silver] As silver and gold are tried by the art of the refiner, so is a man's heart by the praise he receives. If he feel it not, he deserves it; if he be puffed up by it, he is worthless.

Verse 22. Though thou shouldest bray a fool] Leaving all other conjectures, of which commentators are full, I would propose, that this is a metaphor taken from pounding metallic ores in very large mortars, such as are still common in the East, in order that, when subjected to the action of the fire, the metal may be the more easily separated from the ore. However you may try, by precept or example, or both, to instruct a stupid man, your labour is lost; his foolishness cannot be separated from him. You may purge metals of all their dross; but you cannot purge the fool of his folly.

Verse 23. The state of thy flocks] The directions to the end of the chapter refer chiefly to pastoral and agricultural affairs. Do not trust thy flocks to the shepherd merely; number them thyself; look into their condition; see how they are tended; and when, and with what, and in what proportion, they are fed.

Verse 24. For riches are not for ever] All other kinds of property are very transitory. Money and the highest civil honours are but for a short season.
Flocks and herds, properly attended to, may be multiplied and continued from generation to generation.

Verse 25. The hay appeareth] Take care that this be timeously mown, carefully dried, and safely ricked or housed. And when the tender grass and the proper herbs appear in the mountains in the spring, then send forth the lambs, the young of the flock, that they may get suitable pasturage, without too much impover-ishing the home fields; for by the sale of the lambs and goats, the price of the field is paid—all the landlord's demands are discharged. Either a certain number of lambs, goats, and other cattle, was given to the landlord; or so much money as so many lambs, &c., were then worth.

Verse 26. The lambs are for thy clothing] So many fleeces are given in some places as rent to the landlord.

Verse 27. Goats' milk enough for thy food] ללחך lelachmecha, "to thy bread;" for they ate the bread and supped the milk to assist mastication, and help de-glutition. And it seems that bread, with goats' milk, was the general article of food for the master and his family; and for the servant maids who assisted in the household work, and performed the operations required in the dairy.

The reader who wishes to see these maxims detailed and illustrated at large, may consult the writers De Re Rustica, where he will find much curious information.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

The timidity of the wicked. Quick succession in the government of a country is a punishment to the land.
Of the poor who oppress the poor. The upright poor man is preferable to the wicked rich man. The unprofitable conduct of the usurer. The prosperity of the righteous a cause of rejoicing. He is blessed who fears always. A wicked ruler a curse. The murderer generally execrated. The faithful man. The corrupt judge. The foolishness of trusting in one's own heart. The charitable man. When the wicked are elevated, it is a public evil.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXVIII.

Verse 1. The wicked flee] Every wicked man, however bold he may appear, is full of dreary apprehensions relative to both worlds. But the righteous has true courage, being conscious of his own innocence, and the approbation of his God. The unprofitable

4 ° They that forsake the law praise the wicked : f but such as keep the law contend with them.

5 ° Evil men understand not judgment : but h they that seek the LORD understand all things.

6 i Better is the poor that walketh in his uprightness, than he that is perverse in his ways, though he be rich.

7 k Whoso keepeth the law is a wise son :
but he that l is a companion of riotous men shameth his father.

8 m He that by usury and n unjust gain increaseth his substance, he shall gather it for him that will pity the poor.

9 ° He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, p even his prayer æreth.—Old MS. Bible. This word is often used for impious, wicked, ungodly; hence it appears that our word pity anciently meant piety or godliness.

Verse 2. Many are the princes] Nations, as nations, cannot be judged in a future world; therefore, God judges them here. And where the people are very wicked, and the constitution very bad, the succession of princes is frequent—they are generally taken off by an untimely death. Where the people know that the constitution is in their favour, they seldom disturb the prince, as they consider him the guardian of their privileges.

But by a man of understanding] Whether he be a king, or the king's prime minister, the prosperity of the state is advanced by his counsels.

Verse 3. A poor man that oppresseth the poor] Our Lord illustrates this proverb most beautifully, by the parable of the two debtors, Matt. xviii. 23. One owed ten thousand talents, was insolvent, begged for time, was forgiven. A fellow servant owed this one a hundred pence: he was insolvent; but prayed his fellow servant to give him a little time, and he would pay it all. He would not, took him by the throat, and cast him into prison till he should pay that debt. Here the poor oppressed the poor; and what was the consequence? The oppressing poor was delivered to the tormentors; and the forgiven debt charged to his amount, because he showed no mercy. The comparatively poor are often shockingly uncharitable and unfeeling towards the real poor.

Like a sweeping rain] These are frequent in the East; and sometimes carry flocks, crops, and houses, away with them.

Verse 4. They that forsake the law] He that transgresses says, in fact, that it is right to transgress; and thus other wicked persons are encouraged.

Verse 5. They that seek the Lord understand all things.] They are wise unto salvation; they "have the unction from the Holy One, and they know all things," 1 John ii. 20, every thing that is essentially needful for them to know, in reference to both worlds.

Verse 8. He that by usury—increaseth his sub- stance] By taking unlawful interest for his money;
lending to a man in great distress money, for the use of which he requires an exorbitant sum. O that the names of all those unfeeling, hard-hearted, consummate villains in the nation, who thus take advantage of their neighbour's necessities to enrich themselves, were published at every market cross; and then the delinquents all sent to their brother savages in New Zealand. It would be a happy riddance to the country.

Verse 9. He that turneth away his ear from hearing
the law] Many suppose, if they do not know their duty, they shall not be accountable for their transgressions; and therefore avoid every thing that is calculated to enlighten them. They will not read the Bible, lest they should know the will of God; and they will not attend Divine ordinances for the same reason. But this pretence will avail them nothing; as he that might have known his master's will, but would not, shall be treated as he shall be who did know it, and disobeyed it. Even the prayers of such a person as this are reputed sin before God.

Verse 10. Whoso causeth the righteous to go astray]
He who strives to pervert one really converted to God, in order that he may pour contempt on religion, shall fall into that hell to which he has endeavoured to lead the other.

Verse 12. When righteous men do rejoice] When true religion is no longer persecuted, and the word of God duly esteemed, there is great glory; for the word of the Lord has then free course, runs, and is glorified; but when the wicked rise—when they are elevated to places of trust, and put at the head of civil affairs, then the righteous man is obliged to hide himself; the word of the Lord becomes scarce, and there is no open

15 <sup>y</sup> As a roaring lion, and a ranging bear ; <sup>z</sup> so is a wicked ruler over the poor people.

16 The prince that wanteth understanding is also a great oppressor : but he that hateth covetousness shall prolong his days.

17 <sup>a</sup> A man that doeth violence to the blood of any person shall flee to the pit ; let no man stay him.

18 <sup>b</sup> Whoso walketh uprightly shall be saved : but <sup>c</sup> he that is perverse in his ways shall fall at once.

19 <sup>d</sup> He that tilleth his land shall have plenty of bread : but he that followeth after vain persons shall have poverty enough.

20 A faithful man shall abound with blessings : <sup>e</sup> but he that maketh haste to be rich shall not be <sup>f</sup> innocent.

vision. The first was the case in this country, in the days of EDWARD VI. ; the second in the days of his successor, MARY I. Popery, cruelty, and knavery, under her, nearly destroyed the Church and the State in these islands.

Verse 13. He that covereth his sins] Here is a general direction relative to conversion. 1. If the sinner do not acknowledge his sins ; if he cover and excuse them, and refuse to come to the light of God's word and Spirit, lest his deeds should be reprov'd, he shall find no salvation. God will never admit a sinful, unhumbl'd soul, into his kingdom. 2. But if he confess his sin, with a penitent and broken heart, and, by forsaking every evil way, give this proof that he feels his own sore, and the plague of his heart, then he shall have mercy. Here is a doctrine of vital importance to the salvation of the soul, which the weak-est may understand.

Verse 14. Happy is the man that feareth alway] That ever carries about with him that reverential and filial fear of God, which will lead him to avoid sin, and labour to do that which is lawful and right in the sight of God his Saviour.

Verse 16. The prince that wanteth understanding] A weak prince will generally have wicked ministers, for his weakness prevents him from making a proper choice, and he is apt to prefer them who flatter him, 21 <sup>g</sup> To have respect of persons is not good ; for, <sup>h</sup> for a piece of bread that man will transgress.

22 <sup>i</sup> He <sup>k</sup> that hasteth to be rich hath an evil eye, and considereth not that poverty shall come upon him.

23 <sup>l</sup> He that rebuketh a man afterwards shall find more favour than he that flattereth with the tongue.

24 Whoso robbeth his father or his mother, and saith, It is no transgression ; the same <sup>m</sup> is the companion of <sup>n</sup> a destroyer.

25 <sup>o</sup> He that is of a proud heart stirreth up strife : <sup>p</sup> but he that putteth his trust in the Lord shall be made fat.

26 He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool : but whoso walketh wisely, he shall be delivered.

27 <sup>q</sup> He that giveth unto the poor shall not lack : but he that hideth his eyes shall have many a curse.

28 <sup>r</sup> When the wicked rise, <sup>s</sup> men hide themselves : but when they perish, the righteous increase.

and minister most to his pleasures. The quantum of the king's intellect may be always appreciated by the mildness or oppressiveness of his government. He who plunges his people into expensive wars, to support which they are burdened with taxes, is a prince without understanding. He does not know his own interest, and does not regard that of his people. But these things, though general truths, apply more particularly to those despotie governments which prevail in Asiatic countries.

Verse 17. That doeth violence to the blood] He who either slays the innocent, or procures his destruction, may flee to hide himself : but let none give him protection. The law demands his life, because he is a murderer ; and let none deprive justice of its claim. Murder is the most horrid crime in the sight of God and man ; it scarcely ever goes unpunished, and is universally execrated.

Verse 18. Shall fall at once] Shall fall without resource, altogether.

Verse 19. He that tilleth his land] See chap. xii. 11.

Verse 20. He that maketh haste to be rich] See chap. xiii. 11 ; xx. 21.

Verse 24. Whoso robbeth his father] The father's property is as much his own, in reference to the child, as that of the merest stranger. He who robs his parents is worse than a common robber ; to the act of dishonesty and rapine he adds ingratitude, cruelty, and disobedience. Such a person is the companion of a destroyer; he may be considered as a murderer.

Verse 25. Shall be made fat.] Shall be prosperous.

Verse 26. He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool] For his heart, which is deceitful and desperately wicked, will infallibly deceive him.

Verse 27. He that giveth unto the poor] See the notes on the passages referred to in the margin.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXIX.

Verse 1. Hardeneth his neck] Becomes stubborn and obstinate.

Verse 3. But he that keepeth company] רעה roeh, he that feedeth harlots, יעבד ye'ebed, shall utterly destroy his substance. Has there ever been a single case to the contrary?

Verse 4. He that receiveth gifts] This was notoriously the case in this kingdom, before the passing of the Magna Charta, or great charter of liberties. Hence that article in it, Nulli vendemus justitiam; "We will not sell justice to any." I have met with cases in our ancient records where, in order to get his right, a man was obliged almost to ruin himself in presents to the king, queen, and their favourites, to get the case decided in his favour.

Verse 5. Spreadeth a net for his feet.] Beware of a flatterer; he does not flatter merely to please you, but to deceive you and profit himself.

Verse 9. Whether he rage or laugh] Coverdale translates, "Yf a wyse man go to lawe with a foole, whether he deale with him frendly or roughly he geteth no rest."

Verse 11. A fool uttereth all his mind] A man should be careful to keep his own secret, and never tell his whole mind upon any subject, while there are other opinions yet to be delivered; else, if he speak again, he must go over his old ground; and as he brings out nothing new, he injures his former argument.

Verse 12. If a ruler hearken to lies] Wherever the system of espionage is permitted to prevail, there the system of falsity is established; for he who is capable of being a spy and informer, is not only capable of telling and swearing lies, but also of cutting his king's or even his father's throat. I have seen cases, where the same spy received pay from both parties, and deceived both.

Verse 13. The poor and the deceitful man] It is difficult to fix the meaning of תכחי techachim, which we here render the deceitful man. The Targum has, "The poor and the man of little wealth." The Septuagint, "The usurer and the debtor." The

VULGATE, "The poor and CREDITOR." COVERDALE,
"The poor and the LENDER." OTHERS, "The poor and the RICH ;" "The poor and the OPPRESSORS." I suppose the meaning may be the same as in chap. xxii. 2 :
"The rich and the poor meet together ; the Lord is the Maker of them all." Where see the note.

Verse 16. When the wicked are multiplied] That, in the multiplication of the wicked transgression is increased, requires no proof ; but an important doctrine attaches to this. On this account wicked nations and wicked families are cut off and rooted out. Were it not so, righteousness would in process of time be banished from the earth. This will account for many of the numerous instances in which whole families fail.

Verse 18. Where there is no vision] My old MS.
Bible, following the Vulgate, translates : Ubi proph-ete sehal fallen, the peple sehal ben to scattered.
Where Divine revelation, and the faithful preaching of the sacred testimonies, are neither revered nor attended, the ruin of that land is at no great distance.

But he that keepeth the law, happy is he.] Go how it may with others, he shall be safe. So our Lord :
"Blessed are they who hear the word of God, and keep it."

Verse 21. He that delicately bringeth up his servant] Such persons are generally forgetful of their obligations, assume the rights and privileges of children, and are seldom good for any thing.

Verse 22. An angry man stirreth up strife] His spirit begets its like wherever he goes.

And a furious man aboundeth in transgression.] His furious spirit is always carrying him into extremes, and each of these is a transgression.

Verse 23. A man's pride shall bring him low] A proud man is universally despised, and such are often exposed to great mortifications.

21 He that delicately bringeth up his servant from a child shall have him become his son at the length.

22 <sup>f</sup> An angry man stirreth up strife, and a furious man aboundeth in transgression.

23 <sup>g</sup> A man's pride shall bring him low :
but honour shall uphold the humble in spirit.

24 Whoso is partner with a thief hateth his own soul : <sup>h</sup> he heareth cursing, and bewrayeth it not.

25 <sup>i</sup> The fear of man bringeth a snare : but whoso putteth his trust in the LORD <sup>k</sup> shall be safe.

26 <sup>l</sup> Many seek <sup>m</sup> the ruler's favour : but every man's judgment cometh from the LORD.

27 An unjust man is an abomination to the just ; and he that is upright in the way is abomination to the wicked.

for an oath, because his heart is hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

Verse 25. The fear of man bringeth a snare] How often has this led weak men, though sincere in their general character, to deny their God, and abjure his people ! See the case of Peter ; and learn from this, O reader, that where the mighty have been slain, thou wilt fall, unless thou call on the Strong for strength, and for courage to use it. Be not ashamed of Jesus, nor of his people, nor of his cross. Glory in this, that Verse 26. Many seek the ruler's favour] To be screened from the punishment determined by the law ;

but should he grant the favour sought, and pardon the criminal, this takes not away his guilt in the sight of God, from whom all just judgment proceeds.

Verse 27. And he that is upright in the way] "But as for those that be in the right way, the wicked hate them." — COVERDALE.

To this verse the VULGATE adds the following :
Verbum custodiens filius extra perditionem erit ;
"The son that keeps the word shall not fall into perdition." This is not in all copies of the Vulgate : but it was in that from which my old MS. Bible was made, where it is thus translated : The sone keeping the worde sehal ben out of perdisyon. I believe verbum here is intended for the Divine word ; the revelation from God.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXX.

Verse 1. The words of Agur the son of Jakeh] The words Agur, Jakeh, Ithiel, and Ucal, have been considered by some as proper names: by others, as descriptive characters. With some, Agur is Solomon; and Jakeh, David; and Ithiel and Ucal are epithets of Christ.

The Vulgate translates, Verba congregantis filii vomentis: visio, quam locutus est vir, cum quo est Deus, et qui Deo secum morante confortatus, ait. "The words of the collector, the son of the vomiter: the vision of the man who has God with him, and who is fortified by God dwelling with him, saith."

COVERDALE makes the following words a title to the chapter:

"The wordes of Agur the sonne of Jake.

"The prophecie of a true faithfull man, whom God hath helped; whom God hath comforted and nourished."

The whole might be thus translated, keeping near to the letter:—

"The words of the epistle of the obedient son." Or,

"The words of the collector, the son of Jakeh. The parable which הגבר haggeber, the strong man, the hero, spake unto him who is God with me; to him who is God with me, even the strong God."

The visoun that a man spake with whiche is God, and that God with him, wonyng comfortid.—Old MS. Bible.

From this introduction, from the names here used, and from the style of the book, it appears evident that Solomon was not the author of this chapter; and that it was designed to be distinguished from his work by this very preface, which specifically distinguishes it from the preceding work. Nor can the words in verses 2, 3, 8, and 9, be at all applied to Solomon: they suit no part of Solomon's life, nor of his circumstances. We must, therefore, consider it an appendix or supplement to the preceding collection; something in the manner of that part which the men of Hezekiah, king of Judah, had collected. As to mysteries here, many have been found by them who sought for nothing else; but they are all, in my view of the subject, hazarded and precarious. I believe Agur, Jakeh, Ithiel, and Ucal, to be the names of persons who did exist, but of whom we know nothing but what is here mentioned. Agur seems to have been a public teacher, and Ithiel and Ucal to have been his scholars; and what he delivers to them was done by prophecy. It was what the prophets generally term מִסָּא massa, an ORACLE, something immediately delivered by the Holy Spirit for the benefit of man.

Verse 2. Surely I am more brutish] "These words can in no sense, nor by any mode of speech, be true of Solomon: for while he was the wisest of men, he could not have said that he was more brutish than any man, and had not the understanding of a man. It is saying nothing to the purpose, to say he was so independently of the Divine teaching. Had he put this in, even by innuendo, it might be legitimate: but he does not; nor is it by fair implication to be understood. Solomon is not supposed to have written the Proverbs after he fell from God. Then indeed he might have said he had been more brutish than any man. But Agur might have used these words with strict propriety, for aught we know; for it is very probable that he was a rustic, without education, and without any human help, as was the prophet Amos; and that all that he knew now was by the inspiration of the Almighty, independently of which he was rustic and uneducated.

Verse 3. I neither learned wisdom] I have never been a scholar in any of those schools of the wise men, nor have the knowledge of the holy, קִדְשִׁים kedoshim, of the saints or holy persons.

The Septuagint give this a different turn: Θεος δέδιδάχεν με σοφίαν, και γνωσων άγιων ενγνωκα; "God hath taught me wisdom, and the knowledge of the saints I have known."

This may refer to the patriarchs, prophets, or holy men, that lived before the days of Solomon. That is, the translators might have had these in view.

Verse 4. Who hath ascended up into heaven, or descended?] Calnet paraphrases this passage thus: "Who hath descended, &c. In order to show the truth of what he was about to say, he observes: I have not the science of the saints; for how could I have acquired it? Who is he who could attain to that? Who has ascended to heaven to learn that science; and who has descended in order to publish it? Is the science of salvation one of those things that can be apprehended only by study? Is it not a pure gift of the goodness of God? Moses, after having shown to the people the will of God, said to them: 'This commandment which I command thee this day, waters in a garment? who hath established all the ends of the earth? what is his name, and what is his son's name, if thou canst tell?

is not hidden from thee; neither is it far off. It is not in heaven, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it? Dent. xxx. 11, 12. The person whose words we here examining speaks a knowledge more sublime than that contained in the simple laws of the Lord, common to all the people of Israel. He speaks of the sublime science of the designs of God, of his ways, and of his secrets; and in this sense he affirms he has no knowledge."

Who hath gathered the wind in his fists? It is as difficult for a mortal man to acquire this Divine science by his own reason and strength, as to collect the winds in his fists. And who can command the spirit of prophecy, so that he can have it whensoever he pleases?

What is his name? Show me the nature of this Supreme Being. Point out his eternity, omniscience, omnipresence, omnipotence; comprehend and describe him, if thou canst.

What is his son's name? Some copies of the Septuagint have η τι ονομα τοις τικνους αυτου; "Or the name of his sons;" meaning, I suppose, the holy angels, called his saints or holy ones, ver. 3.

The Arabic has, وما اسم والدة and what is the name of his father? him who begat him. But the Chaldee, the Syriac, and the Vulgate, read as the Hebrew.

Many are of opinion that Agur refers here to the first and second persons of the ever-blessed TRINITY. It may be so; but who would venture to rest the proof of that most glorious doctrine upon such a text, to say nothing of the obscure author? The doctrine is true, sublimely true; but many doctrines have suffered in controversy, by improper texts being urged in their favour. Every lover of God and truth should be very choice in his selections, when he comes forward in behalf of the more mysterious doctrines of the Bible. Quote nothing that is not clear; advance nothing that does not tell. When we are obliged to spend a world of critical labour, in order to establish the sense of a text which we intend to allege in favour of the doctrine we wish to support, we may rest assured that we are going the wrong way to work. Those who indiscriminately amass every text of Scripture they think bears upon the subject they defend, give their adversaries great advantage against them. I see many a sacred doctrine suffering through the bad judgment of its friends every day. The Godhead of Christ, salvation by faith, the great atoning sacrifice, and other essential doctrines of this class, are all suffering in this way. My heart says, with deep concern,

Non tali auxilio, nec defensoribus istis, Tempus eget.

When truth is assailed by all kinds of weapons, handled by the most powerful foes, injudicious defenders may be ranked among its enemies. To such we may innocently say, "Keep your cabins; you do assist the storm."

Verse 5. Every word of God is pure כל אמרה of God is purified. אלוה צרופה col imrath eloah tseruphah, "Every oracle of God is purified." A metaphor taken from the purifying of metals. Every thing that God has pronounced, every inspiration which the prophets have received, is pure, without mixture of error, without dross. Whatever trials it may be exposed to, it is always like gold: it bears the fire, and comes out with the same lustre, the same purity, and the same weight.

He is a shield unto them] And this oracle among the rest. "He is the defence of all them that put their trust in him. לכל lechol, to all, is added here by nineteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS.; for instead of לחסי lachosim, to the trusters, they read לכל החסים lechol hachosim, "to every one of them that trust." Where the preposition and adjective are not only added, but the noun is written more full, and more emphatic: but a translation cannot well express it without paraphrase.

Verse 6. Add not thou unto his words] You can no more increase their value by any addition, than you can that of gold by adding any other metal to it. Take care that you do not any thing that this word forbids, nor leave undone any thing that it commands; for this is adding and diminishing in Scripture phrase.

Lest he reprove thee] Lest he try thy word by fire, as his has been tried; and it appear that, far from abiding the test, the fire shows thine to be reprobate silver; and so thou be found a falsifier of God's word, and a liar.

How amply has this been fulfilled in the case of the Romish Church! It has added all the gross stuff in the Apocrypha, besides innumerable legends and traditions, to the word of God! They have been tried by the refiner's fire. And this Church has been reprov'd, and found to be a liar, in attempting to filiate on the most holy God spurious writings discreditable to his nature.

Verse 7. Two things have I required of thee] These two petitions are mentioned in the next verse; and he wishes to have them answered before he should die. That is, he wishes the answer now, that he may live the rest of his life in the state he describes.

happiness, every vain expectation. Let me not set my heart on any thing that is not solid, true, durable, and eternal. 2. Lies, כזב debar azab, all words of deception, empty pretensions, false promises, uncertain dependences, and words that fail; promises which, when they become due, are like bad bills; they are dishonoured because they are found to be forged, or the drawer insolvent.

From the import of the original, I am satisfied that Agur prays against idolatry, false religion, and false worship of every kind. שוא shav is used for an idol, a false god. Jer. xviii. 15: "My people have forsaken me; they have burnt incense to VANITY;" לשוא lashshav, "to an idol." Psa. xxxi. 6: "I have hated them that regard lying VANITIES;" הבלי שוא habley shave, "vain idols." See also Hos. xii. 11; Jonah ii. 8. And כזב azab, a thing that fails or deceives, may well apply to the vain pretensions, false promises, and deceptive religious rites of idolatry. So Jer. xv. 18: "Wilt thou be unto me as a liar," כמו אכזב kemo achzob, like the false, failing promises of the false gods; "and as waters that fail," לא נאמנו lo neemanu, that are not faithful; not like the true God, whose promises never fail. According to this view of the subject, Agur prays, 1. That he may be preserved from idolatry. 2. That he may put no confidence in any words but those pure words of God that never fail them that trust in him.

Give me neither poverty nor riches] Here are three requests: 1. Give me not poverty. The reason is added: Lest, being poor, I shall get into a covetous spirit, and, impelled by want, distrust my Maker, and take my neighbour's property; and, in order to excuse, hide, or vindicate my conduct, I take the name of my God in vain; תפסתי taphasti, "I catch at the name of God." Or, by swearing falsely, endeavour to make myself pass for innocent. Forsovere the name of my God.—Old MS. Bible. Coverdale, "deny or apostatize from him."

2. Give me not riches. For which petition he gives a reason also: Lest I be full, and addict myself to luxurious living, pamper the flesh and starve the soul, and so deny thee, the Fountain of goodness; and, if called on to resort to first principles, I say, Who is Jehovah? Why should I acknowledge, why should I serve him? And thus cast aside all religion, and all moral obligation.

3. The third request is, Feed me with food convenient for me, חקי להם חקי hatripheni lechem chukki; the meaning of which is, "give me as prey my statute allowance of bread," i. e., my daily bread, a sufficient portion for each day. There is an allusion made to hunting: "Direct so by thy good providence, that I may each day find sufficient portion to subsist on, as a hunter in the forest prays that he may have good speed." It is the province of a preacher to show the importance and utility of such a prayer, and dilate the circumstances, and expand the reasons, after the commentator has shown the literal sense.

Verse 10. Accuse not a servant] Do not bring a false accusation against a servant, lest thou be found guilty of the falsehood, and he curse thee for having traduced his character, and in his turn traduce thine. In general, do not meddle with other people's servants.

Verse 11. There is a generation] There are such persons in the world. In this and the three following verses the wise man points out four grand evils that prevailed in his time.

The first, Those who not only did not honour, but who evil-treated, their parents.

Verse 12. The second, Those who were self-righteous, supposing themselves pure, and were not so.

Verse 13. The third, Those who were full of vanity, pride, and insolence.

Verse 14. The fourth, The greedy, cruel, and oppressive, and, especially, oppressive to the poor.

Verse 15. The horseleech hath two daughters, crying, Give, give.] "This horseleech," says Calmet, "is covetousness, and her two daughters are Avarice and Ambition. They never say, It is enough; they are never satisfied; they are never contented."

FRANCIS.

The word עֲלֹקָה alukah, which we here translate horseleech, is read in no other part of the Bible. May it not, like Agur, Jakeh, Ithiel, and Ucal, be a proper name, belonging to some well-known woman of his acquaintance, and well known to the public, who had two daughters notorious for their covetousness and lechery ? And at first view the following verse may be thought to confirm this supposition : "There are three things that are never satisfied, yea, four things say not, It is enough : " the grave, the barren womb, the earth, the fire. What an astonishing similarity there is between this and the following institute, taken from the Code of Hindoo Laws, chap. xx., sec. i., p. 203.

"A woman is never satisfied with the copulation of man, no more than a fire is satisfied with burning fuel ; or the main ocean is with receiving the rivers ; or death, with the dying of men and animals." You can no more satisfy these two daughters of Alukah than you can the grave, &c.

Some of the rabbins have thought that alukah signifies destiny, or the necessity of dying, which they say has two daughters, Eden and Gehenna, paradise and hell. The former has never enough of righteous souls ; the latter, of the wicked. Similar to them is the opinion of Bochart, who thinks alukah means destiny, and the two daughters, the grave and hell ; into the first of which the body descends after death, and into the second, the soul.

The Septuagint gives it a curious turn, by connecting the fifteenth with the sixteenth verse : Τη βδελγη θυγατερης ησαν αγαπησει αγαπωμεναι, και αι τρεις αυται ουκ ενεμπησαν αυτην, και η τεταρτη ουκ ηρεσθη εἰπεῖν Ἰκανον ; "The horseleech had three well-loved daughters ; and these three were not able to satisfy her desire : and the fourth was not satisfied, so as to say, It is enough."

After all, I think my own conjecture the most probable. Alukah is a proper name, and the two daughters were of the description I have mentioned.

Verse 17. The eye that mocketh at his father] This seems to be spoken against those who curse their father, and do not bless their mother, ver. 11.

The ravens of the valley] Those which frequent the places where dead carcasses and offal are most likely to be found. The raven, the crow, the rook, the daw, the carrion crow, and the Cornish chough, appear to be all of the same genus. Some of them live on pulse and insects ; others, the raven in particular, live on carrion.

The young eagles shall eat it.] The mother eagle shall scoop out such an eye, and carry it to the nest to feed her young. Many of the disobedient to parents have come to an untimely end, and, in the field of battle, where many a profligate has fallen, and upon gibbets, have actually become the prey of ravenous birds.

Verse 19. The way of an eagle] I borrow, with thanks, the very sensible note of the Rev. Mr. Holder on this passage.

"The particle כֵּן ken plainly shows that verses 19 and 20 are to be taken in connection ; consequently, it is a comparison between the way of an adulterous woman, and the way of the things here described.

"The adulterous woman goes about in search of her deluded victim, like as the eagle takes its flight into the air to spy out its prey. She uses every species of blandishment and insinuation to allure and beguile, as the serpent employs its windings and sinuous motions to pass along the rocks ; she pursues a course surrounded with danger, as a ship in the midst of the sea is continually exposed to the fury of the tempest, and the hazard of shipwreck ; and she tries every means, and exercises all her sagacity, to prevent the discovery of her illicit enjoyments, as a man attempts to conceal his clandestine intercourse with a maid. Such is the conduct of a lewd woman, marked by specious dissimulation and traitorous blandishment ; she eateth, and wipeth her mouth—she indulges her adulterous lust, yet artfully endeavours to conceal it, and with unblushing countenance asserts her innocence, exclaiming, I have done no wickedness."

CHAUCER's January and May is an excellent comment on such wiles and protestations.

The way of a man with a maid.] בִּנְיָמָה bealmah with or in a maid ; but one of De Rossi's MSS. has and saith, I have done no wickedness.

בְּעַלְמַי bealmay, in his youth; and with this the SEPTUAGINT, ἐν νεότητι, the VULGATE, in adulescentia, the SYRIAC and the ARABIC agree; and so also my own MS. Bible:—The wife of a man in his warring youth. Dr. Kennicott, in a sermon preached at Oxford, 1765, p. 46, has defended the reading of the versions, corroborating it by two MSS., one in the Harleian, and the other in the Bodleian library, besides that mentioned by De Rossi. See De Rossi's Var. Lect. Certainly the way of a man in his youth contains too many intricacies for human wisdom to explore. He only who searches the heart knows fully its various corrupt principles, and their productions. The common reading may refer to the formation of a child in the womb. But some have understood it of the immaculate conception. See my note on Matt. i. 23, where the subject is largely considered.

If we take the four things which Agur says were too wonderful for him, in their obvious sense, there is little difficulty in them. 1. The passage which a bird makes through the air; 2. That which is made by a serpent on a rock; and, 3. That made by a ship through the sea, are such as cannot be ascertained: for who can possibly show the track in which either of them has passed? And as to the fourth, if it refer to the suspected incontinence of one reputed a virgin, the signs are so equivocal, as to be absolutely unascertainable. The existence of the hymen has been denied by the ablest anatomists; and the signs of continence or incontinence, except in the most recent cases, are such as neither man nor woman can swear to, even to the present day; and they were certainly not less difficult to Agur and his contemporaries. I shall carry this matter no farther.

Verse 21. For three things the earth is disquieted, and for four which it cannot bear] This is another enigma. Four things insupportable to men. 1. A slave, when he becomes ruler. 2. An overfed fool. 3. An ill-tempered woman, when mistress of a family. And, 4. A servant maid, when the rule of the house is committed to her.

1. A slave, when he comes to bear rule, is an unprincipled tyrant. It has been often observed both in America and in the West Indies, when it was judged necessary to arm some of the most confidential slaves, that no regiments were used so cruelly in the drill, &c., as those black regiments that had black officers.

2. The overfed fool. The intellectually weak man, who has every thing at his command, has generally manners which none can bear; and, if a favourite with his master, he is insupportable to all others.

3. An ill-tempered woman, when she gets embarrassed with domestic cares, is beyond bearing.

4. A servant maid, when, either through the death of the mistress, or the sin of the husband, she is in fact exalted to be head over the family, is so insolent and impudent, as to be hateful to every one, and execrated by all.

Verse 24. There be four things] Of which it is said, they are very little but very wise. 1. The ants. 2. The rabbits. 3. The locusts. 4. The spider.

1. The ants show their wisdom by preparing their meat in the summer; seeking for it and storing it when it may be had; not for winter consumption, for they sleep all that time; but for autumn and spring. See the note on chap. vi. 6. The ants are a people; they have their houses, towns, cities, public roads, &c. I have seen several of these, both of the brown and large black ant.

2. The rabbits act curiously enough in the construction of their burrows; but the word שָׁפִי shaphan probably does not here mean the animal we call coney or rabbit. It is most likely that this is what Dr. Shaw calls the Daman-Israel; a creature very like a rabbit, but never burrowing in the ground, but dwelling in clefts and holes of rocks.

3. The locusts. These surprising animals we have already met with and described. Though they have no leader, yet they go forth by troops, some miles in circumference, when they take wing.

4. The spider. This is a singularly curious animal, both in the manner of constructing her house, her nets, and taking her prey. But the habits, &c., of these and such like must be sought in works on natural history.

Verse 29. There be three things which go well] Here is another set of emblems; four things which walk beautifully and with majesty. 1. The lion. 2. The greyhound. 3. The he-goat. And, 4. A king.

1. Nothing can be more majestic than the walk of the lion. It is deliberate, equal, firm, and in every respect becoming the king of the forest.

2. The greyhound. זָרְזִיר כְּתָנִים zarzir mothnayim, the girt in the loins; but what this beast is we do not distinctly know. It is most likely that this was the greyhound, which in the East are remarkably fine, and very fleet. Scarcely any thing can be conceived to go with greater fleetness, in full chase, than a greyhound with its prey in view: it seems to swim over the earth.

3. The goat, שׂה tayish. This is generally allowed to be the he-goat; and how he walks, and what state he assumes, in the presence of his part of the flock, every one knows, who has at all noticed this animal. The ram also, which some suppose to be intended, is both fierce and majestic at the head of the sheep.

4. And a king, against whom there is no rising up. That is, a king whose court, counsels, and troops, are so firmly united to him, as to render all hopes of successful conspiracy against him utterly vain. He walks boldly and majestically about, being safe in the affections of his people. But the Hebrew is singular; it makes but two words; and these are they, מלך אלכום umelech Alkum, "and King Alkum." It is a doubt whether this may not be a proper name, as Agur abounds in them; see Ithiel, Ucal, and probably Alukah, ver. 15. But it is said, "We know nothing of a king named Alkum." True; nor do we know any thing of Agur, Ithiel, Ucal, to say nothing of Alukah. And this might have been some remarkable chieftain, who carried his victories wherever he went, and was remarkably fortunate. If, however, we separate the word into אל al, "not," and קום kum, "he arose," we may make the interpretation above given.

Verse 32. If thou hast done foolishly] And who has not, at one time or other of his life?

Lay thine hand upon thy mouth.] Like the leper; and cry to God, Unclean! unclean! and keep silence to all besides. God will blot out thy offence, and neither the world nor the Church ever know it, for he is merciful; and man is rarely able to pass by a sin committed by his fellows, especially if it be one to which himself is by nature not liable or inclined.

Verse 33. And the wringing] Who pugeth smythly draweth out blood.—Old MS. Bible. This is well expressed in homely phrase. The Septuagint have, "draw the milk, and you may have butter; if you press the nostrils you may bring out blood; and if you draw out your discourse to a great length, you may have strife and contention." Avoid, therefore, all strong excitements and irritations. Coverdale's translation of this verse is very simple: "Whoso chyneth mylek maketh butter; he that rubbeth his nose, maketh it blede; and he that causeth wrath, bryngeth forth strife."

NOTES ON CHAP. XXXI.

Verse 1. The words of King Lemuel] ברכי למואל כלל dibrey lemuel melech, "The words to Muel the king." So the Syriac; and so I think it should be read, the ל lamed being the article or preposition.

But who is Muel or Lemuel? Solomon, according to general opinion; and the mother here mentioned, Bath-sheba. I cannot receive these sayings; for 1. Whoever this was, he appears to have been the first-born of his mother: called here emphatically בן ביתי bar bitni, the son of my womb; which is not likely to be true of Solomon, as his mother had been the wife of Uriah, and possibly had borne that rough and faithful soldier some children. 2. It is intimated here that this son had come by a lawful marriage: hence בר נדארי bar nedarai, the son of my vow, her matrimonial covenant; for so it is most natural to understand the words. But is there any proper sense in which we can say that this was correct in reference to David, Bath-sheba, and Solomon? For although the son born in adultery died, it is by no means likely that Bath-sheba made any particular vows relative to Solomon; for of her piety, so much vaunted of by some writers, we yet want the proofs.

But, however this may be, there is no evidence whatever that Muel or Lemuel means Solomon; the chapter seems to be much later than his time, and the several Chaldaisms which occur in the very opening of it are no mean proof of this. If Agur was not the author of it, it may be considered as another supplement to the book of Proverbs. Most certainly Solomon did not write it.

The prophecy that his mother taught him.] כִּשָּׂא massa may here signify the oracle; the subject that came by Divine inspiration; see on chap. xxx. 1. From this and some other circumstances it is probable that both these chapters were written by the same author. Houbigant thinks that Massa here is the name of a place; and, therefore, translates, "The words of Lemuel, king of Massa, with which his mother instructed him."

Verse 2. What, my son? The Chaldee בר bar is used twice in this verse, instead of the Hebrew בֶּן ben, son. This verse is very elliptical; and commentators, according to their different tastes, have inserted words, indeed some of them a whole sentence, to make up the sense. Perhaps Coverdale has hit the sense as nearly as any other: "These are the words of Kyne Lemuel; and the lesson that his mother taught him. My sonne, thou son of my body, O my deare beloved sonne!"

The son of my vows? A child born after vows made for offspring is called the child of a person's vows.

Verse 3. Give not thy strength] Do not waste thy substance on women. In such intercourse the strength of body, soul, and substance is destroyed. Such connections are those which destroy kings, מַלְכִּין mclachin, the Chaldee termination instead of the Hebrew.

Verse 4. It is not for kings—to drink wine] An intemperate man is ill fit to hold the reins of government.

Verse 5. Lest they drink, and forget the law] When they should be administering justice, they are found incapable of it; or, if they go into the judgment-seat, may pervert justice.

Verse 6. Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish] We have already seen, that inebriating drinks were mercifully given to condemned criminals,

Are appointed to destruction.] בני חלוף beney chaloph, variously translated, children of passage—indigent travellers; children of desolation—those who have no possessions, or orphans. I believe it either signifies those who are strangers, and are travelling from place to place, or those who are ready to perish in consequence of want or oppression.

Verse 10. Who can find a virtuous woman? This and the following verses are acrostic, each beginning with a consecutive letter of the Hebrew alphabet: ver. 10, א aleph; ver. 11, ב beth; ver. 12, ג gimel; and so on to the end of the chapter, the last verse of which has the letter ט tau. From this to the end of the chapter we have the character of a woman of genuine worth laid down; first, in general, ver. 10, 11, and 12; secondly, in its particular or component parts, ver. 13–29; and, thirdly, the summing up of the character, ver. 30, 31.

I. Her general character.

1. She is a virtuous woman—a woman of power and strength. אִשֶּׁת חַיִּל esheth chayil, a strong or virtuous wife, full of mental energy.

2. She is invaluable; her price is far above rubies—no quantity of precious stones can be equal to her worth.

Verse 11. The heart of her husband]

3. She is an unspotted wife. The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her—he knows she will take care that a proper provision is made for his household, and will not waste any thing. He has no need for spoil—he is not obliged to go out on predatory excursions, to provide for his family, at the expense of the neighbouring tribes.

Verse 12. She will do him good]

4. She has her husband's happiness in view constantly. She recompenses all his kindness to her in beneficent acts. For kind words she returns kind 13 She seeketh wool, and flax, and <sup>r</sup>worketh willingly with her hands.

15 <sup>s</sup>She riseth also while it is yet night, and <sup>t</sup>giveth meat to her household, and a portion to her maidens.

16 She considereth a field and <sup>u</sup>buyeth it:

deeds. Her good is unmixed; she will do him good, and not evil. 2. Her good is not capricious; it is constant and permanent, while she and her husband live. His heart safely trusts in her, for she will do him good all the days of her life. This is her general character.

Verse 13. She seeketh wool, and flax, and worketh willingly, &c.]

11. This is the second part of her character, giving the particulars of which it is composed.

1. She did not buy ready woven cloth: she procured the raw material, if wool, most probably from her own flocks; if flax, most probably from her own fields.

2. Here she manufactured; for she worketh willingly with her hands. And all her labour is a cheerful service; her will, her heart, is in it.

It needs no arguments to prove that women, even of the highest ranks, among the Greeks, Romans, and Israelites, worked with their hands at every kind of occupation necessary for the support of the family. This kind of employment was not peculiar to the virtuous woman in the text.

Verse 14. She is like the merchants' ships]

3. She acts like merchants. If she buy anything for her household, she sells sufficient of her own manufactures to pay for it; if she imports, she exports: and she sends articles of her own manufacturing or produce to distant countries; she traffics with the neighbouring tribes.

Verse 15. She riseth also while it is yet night]

4. She is an economist of time; and when the nights are long, and the days short, her family not only spend a part of the evening after sunset in domestic labour, but they all arise before daylight, and prepare the day's food, that they may not have their labour interrupted. To those who are going to the fields, and to the flocks, she gives the food necessary for the day: תרף teref, prey, a term taken from hunting, the object of which was, the supplying their natural wants: hence applied to daily food. See notes on chap. xxx. 8. And to the women who are to be employed within she gives חק chok, the task—the kind of work they are to do, the materials out of which they are to form it, and the quantity she expects from each. Thus all the servants are settled: their food, work, and tasks appointed. Every thing is done orderly.

Verse 16. She considereth a field and buyeth it]

5. She provides for the growing wants of her family. More land will shortly be needed, for the family is growing up; and having seen a field contiguous to her own, which was on sale, she estimates its worth, with the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard.

17 She girdeth her loins with strength, and strengtheneth her arms.

18 <sup>v</sup>She perceiveth that her merchandise is good: her candle goeth not out by night.

19 She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff.

and purchases it a good bargain; and she pays for it by the fruit of her own industry.

6. She does not restrict herself to the bare necessities of life; she is able to procure some of its comforts. She plants a vineyard, that she may have wine for a beverage, for medicine, and for sacrifice. This also is procured of her own labour. Whatever goes out brings its worth in; and barter, not buying, is her chief mode of traffic.

Verse 17. She girdeth her loins with strength]

7. She takes care of her own health and strength, not only by means of useful labour, but by healthy exercise. She avoids what might enervate her body, or soften her mind—she is ever active, and girt ready for every necessary exercise. Her loins are firm, and her arms strong.

Verse 18. She perceiveth that her merchandise is good]

8. She takes care to manufacture the best articles of the kind, and to lay on a reasonable price that she may secure a ready sale. Her goods are in high repute, and she knows she can sell as much as she can make. And she finds that while she pleases her customers, she increases her own profits.

9. She is watchful and careful. Her candle—her lamp, burns all night, which is of great advantage in case of sudden alarms; and in the times and places where there were so many banditti, this was a very necessary family regulation. Perhaps some works were carried on during the night, those employed sleeping in the daytime. Thus labour never stood still; whilst some slept, others worked. This was no unusual thing in ancient times; and it prevails now; but alas! little children are often thus employed to help to support their indigent parents, and to fill the coffers of their unfeeling taskmasters.

Verse 19. She layeth her hands to the spindle]

10. She gives an example of skill and industry to her household. She takes the distaff, that on which the wool or flax was rolled; and the spindle, that by twisting of which she twisted the thread with the right hand, while she held the distaff in the guard of the left arm, and drew down the thread with the fingers of the left hand. Allowing that spindle and distaff are proper translations of כִּשּׁוֹר kishor, and פֶּלֶךְ pelech, this was their use, and the way in which they were used. The spindle and distaff are the most ancient of all the instruments used for spinning, or making thread. The spinning-wheel superseded them in these countries; but still they were in considerable use till spinning machinery superseded both them and the spinning-wheels in general.

20 * She * stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy.

21 She is not afraid of the snow for her household: for all her household are clothed with <sup>γ</sup> scarlet.

22 She maketh herself coverings of tapestry; her clothing is silk and purple.

* Heb. She spreadeth.—* Eph. iv. 28; Heb. xiii. 16.

Verse 20. She stretcheth out her hand to the poor]

11. She is truly charitable. She knows that in every portion of a man's gain God requires a lot for the poor; and if this is not given, God's blessing is not in the rest. And she is not contented to give common alms. While with one hand (ר' yad) she relieves the general poor, with both hands (ר'יה yadeyha) she gives to the needy, לעני leaney, to the afflicted poor.

Verse 21. She is not afraid of the snow]

12. She is not anxious relative to the health and comfort of her family in the winter season, having provided clothes sufficient for each in the cold weather, in addition to those which they wore in the warm season.

For all her household are clothed with scarlet.] Not scarlet, for the colour can avail nothing in keeping off the cold; nor would it be a proper colour for the bogs and dirt of winter. But שנים shanim, from שנה shannah, to iterate, to double, signifies not only scarlet, so called from being twice or doubly dyed, but also double garments, not only the ordinary coat but the surtoul or great-coat also, or a cloak to cover all. But most probably double garments, or twofold to what they were accustomed to wear, are here intended. If the general clothing be intended, scarlet cannot be the meaning, nor did our translators entirely rely on it; and therefore put double garments, the true meaning, in the margin, from which it cannot be too speedily transferred to the text. The Vulgate has "duplicibus." And my old MS. very properly, Alle fursoth hir heoml men, ben clotheð with double. And Coverdale, with equal propriety, "For all hir household folk are duple clothed." But if her husband and children alone are referred to, scarlet, which is the general meaning of the term, may be proper enough; as even in these countries of ours, scarlet, as being a lively bright colour, is used in the winter dresses.

Verse 22. She maketh herself coverings of tapestry]

13. She is not regardless either of her own person, or of the decent, proper appearance of her presses and wardrobe. She has coverings or carpeting for her guests to sit upon; she has also tapestry, מרבדים marbaddim, either tapestry, carpeting, or quilted work for her beds; and her own clothing is שש shesh, fine flax, or linen cloth, and purple; probably for a cloak or mantle. The fine linen or cotton cloth of Egypt is probably intended. I have often seen it wrapping the bodies of mummies; it is something like our coarse calico. The purple was supposed to have been dyed by a precious liquor obtained from the pinna magna, a large shell-fish, of the muscle kind, found on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea. I have seen

23 * Her husband is known in the gates, when he sitteth among the elders of the land.

γ Or, double garments.—* Chap. xii. 4.

some of them nearly two feet in length. But it is a doubt whether any such liquor was ever obtained from this or any other fish; and the story itself is invented merely to hide the secret, the proper method of dying purple; which was kept so well that it certainly died with the ancients.

Verse 23. Her husband is known in the gates]

14. She is a loving wife, and feels for the respectability and honour of her husband. He is an elder among his people, and he sits as a magistrate in the gate. He is respected not only on account of the neatness and cleanliness of his person and dress; but because he is the husband of a woman who is justly held in universal esteem. And her complete management of household affairs gives him full leisure to devote himself to the civil interests of the community.

Verse 24. She maketh fine linen, and selleth it]

15. She is here remarkable for carrying on a traffic of splendid and ornamental dresses, or habits, as she is, ver. 13, for "a coarser manufacture." The כרן sidon is supposed to come from سدون in Arabic; and to signify a kind of loose inner garment, shirt, chemise, or fine muslin covering. Some of these are so exceedingly fine, like the abroam, that when spread on the grass, they are scarcely discernible. Some such garments as these are still worn by ladies in India and in China, and are so thin and transparent, that every part of the body may be seen through them. I have many representations of persons clothed in this way before me both of the Chinese, the Hindoo, and the Malabar ladies. Probably this eminent Jewish matron had such articles manufactured in her own house. She dealt also in girdles. These are still a very general and very expensive article of dress. I have seen them made of silk, and highly ornamented with gold and silver thread, worked into flowers and various curious devices. The loose Eastern robe is confined by these; and the word may also take in the shawl of the turban, which is often superb and costly. It is properly the girdle for the head. As these were generally woven, the consumption was great; and an able artist must have had a good trade.

The Arabic gives a remarkable translation of this verse: "She maketh towels, (or table-cloths,) and sells them to the inhabitants of Basra, (a city in Mesopotamia,) and fine linens, and sells them to the Canaanites." My old MS. Bible has, Sandel sche made and sold, and a littl girdl sche tolt to Chanane. Perhaps לכנעני lakkenaani, for the merchant, may stand here for לכנענים lakkenaanim, the Canaanites.

Verse 25. Strength and honour are her clothing]

16. All the articles manufactured by herself or under her care have a double perfection: 1. They are strong. 2. They are elegant; Strength and honour are her clothing; and on account of this she shall rejoice in time to come; she shall never have occasion to blush for any thing she has made, for any thing she or hers have worn, or for any thing she has sold. Besides, she has so conducted herself that she has reason to expect that the hand of the Lord shall be still with her, and shall keep her from evil that it may not grieve her.

Verse 26. She openeth her mouth with wisdom]

17. He comes now to the moral management of her family. 1. She is wise and intelligent; she has not neglected the cultivation of her mind. 2. She is amiable in her carriage, full of good nature, well tempered, and conciliating in her manners and address.

In her tongue is the law of kindness.] This is the most distinguishing excellence of this woman. There are very few of those who are called managing women who are not lords over their husbands, tyrants over their servants, and insolent among their neighbours. But this woman, with all her eminence and excellence, was of a meek and quiet spirit. Blessed woman!

Verse 27. She looketh well to the ways of her household]

18. She is a moral manager; she takes care that all shall behave themselves well; that none of them shall keep bad company or contract vicious habits. A religious industry, or an industrious religion, is the law of her house. She can instruct them in religion, as well as she can teach them in their labour. In her house, diligence in business, and fervency of spirit, serving the Lord, go hand in hand.

And catcheth not the bread of idleness.]

19. She knows that idleness leads to vice; and therefore every one has his work, and every one has his proper food. That they may work well, they are fed well; and every one, at least, earns the bread that he eats—catcheth not the bread of idleness.

Verse 28. Her children arise up, and call her blessed]

20. She considers a good education next to Divine influence; and she knows also that if she train up a child in the way he should go, when he is old he will not depart from it. 1. Her children are well bred; they rise up and pay due respect. 2. They are taught the fear of the Lord, and obedience to his testimonies; therefore they call her blessed. So they are of a decent, orderly, respectable, religious behaviour. 3. Her husband is so satisfied with her conduct towards himself, his household, his business, and their children, that he praiseth her. He shows himself sensible of her excellence, and encourages her, in her work, by the commendations he bestows.

29 Many daughters <sup>b</sup> have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all.

30 Favour is deceitful, and <sup>c</sup> beauty is vain: but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised.

Verse 29. Many daughters have done virtuously] This is undoubtedly the speech of the husband, giving testimony to the excellence of his wife: "Her husband also, and he praiseth her, saying, 'Many daughters,' women, 'have done virtuously,' with due propriety as wives, mistresses, and mothers; 'but thou,' my incomparable wife, 'excellest them all;' וְאַתָּה עָלִית עָל כֻּלָּהּ veath alith al cullanah, but thou hast ascended above the whole of them—thou hast carried every duty, every virtue, and every qualification and excellency, to a higher perfection, than any of whom we have ever read or heard." And let the reader seriously consider the above particulars, as specified under the different heads and subdivisions; and he will be probably of the same mind. But high as the character of this Jewish matron stands in the preceding description, I can say that I have met at least her equal, in a daughter of the Rev. Dr. Samuel Annesly, the wife of Samuel Wesley, sen., rector of Epworth in Lincolnshire, and mother of the late extraordinary brothers, John and Charles Wesley. I am constrained to add this testimony, after having traced her from her birth to her death, through all the relations that a woman can bear upon earth. Her Christianity gave to her virtues and excellences a heightening, which the Jewish matron could not possess. Besides, she was a woman of great learning and information, and of a depth of mind, and reach of thought, seldom to be found among the daughters of Eve, and not often among the sons of Adam.

Verse 30. Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain, &c.]

III. Here is the summing up of the character. 1. Favour, חֵן chen, grace of manner may be deceitful, many a fair appearance of this kind is put on, assumed for certain secular or more unworthy purposes; it is learned by painful drilling in polished seminaries, and, being the effect of mere physical discipline, it continues while the restraint lasts; but it is שֶׁקֶר sheker, a lie, a mere semblance, an outward varnish. It is not the effect of internal moral regulation; it is an outside, at which the inside murmurs; and which, because not ingenuous, is a burden to itself.

2. Beauty, הַיּוֹפִי hayophi, elegance of shape, symmetry of features, dignity of mien, and beauty of countenance, are all הֶבֶל hebel, vanity; sickness impairs them, suffering deranges them, and death destroys them.

3. "But a woman that feareth the Lord," that possesses true religion, has that grace that harmonizes the soul, that purifies and refines all the temper and passions, and that ornament of beauty, a meek and quiet mind, which in the sight of God is of great price—

She shall be praised.] This is the lasting grace, the unfading beauty.

Verse 31. Give her of the fruit of her hands] This may be a prayer. May she long enjoy the fruit of her labours! May she see her children's children, and peace upon Israel!

And let her own works praise her in the gates.] Let what she has done be spoken of for a memorial of her; let her bright example be held forth in the most public places. Let it be set before the eyes of every female, particularly of every wife, and especially of every mother; and let them learn from this exemplar, what men have a right to expect in their wives, the mistresses of their families, and the mothers of their children. Amen.

MASORETIC NOTES ON THIS BOOK.

Number of verses in the book of Proverbs, 915.

Middle verse, chap. xvi. 18.

Sections, 8.

The Syriac reckons 1863 verses.

The Arabic concludes thus:—"The discipline of Solomon written out by the friends of Hezekiah, king of Judah, the interpretation or translation of which is extremely difficult, (but) is now completed by the assistance and influence of the Son of God."

In the introduction to the book of Proverbs, among the several collections of a similar nature which are mentioned there, I have referred to M. Galand's Maximes des Orientaux. From this work, as contained in the supplement to the Bibliothèque Orientale, I have translated the following selection. They will serve to show the curious reader how many sayings similar to those of Solomon still abound in the East.

ASIATIC PROVERBS.

I fear God; and beside him I fear none, but that man who fears him not.

He who knows not his Maker cannot know himself. Godliness is the greatest wisdom, and impiety the greatest of follies.

The fear of God is the greatest safeguard.

To sin once is too much; but a thousand acts of devotion towards God are not sufficient to honour him.

If a man foresaw his end, and his exit from life, he would abhor his actions, and their deceitfulness.

Life is a sort of sleep, from which many awake not but in death.

The life of man is a path that leads to death.

The orphan is not the person who has lost his father; but he who has neither wisdom, nor a good education.

Want of good sense is worse than all the degrees of poverty.

Nothing so effectually hides what we are as silence.

He who has least wisdom has most vanity.

There is no greatness of soul in avenging one's self.

The heart of the fool is in his mouth, and the tongue of the wise man is in his heart.

He who runs with a slack rein, guided only by hope, encounters the last moment of his life, and falls.

Envy has no rest.

When you have once received a benefit, render yourself not unworthy of it, by a want of gratitude.

The desire of revenge is a constant hinderance to a happy and contented life.

When you have got an advantage over your enemy, pardon him, in returning God thanks for that advantage.

When you are in prosperity, you need seek no other revenge against him who envies you than the mortification he has from it.

How advantageous must wisdom be to its possessor, seeing it is of so great value as not to be purchased by money!

Nothing obtains pardon more speedily than repentance.

There is no disease so dangerous as the want of common sense.

Of all vices, vanity and a love of contention are the most difficult to be corrected.

Visiting your neighbour is no crime; but your visits should not be so often repeated, as to induce him to say, It is enough.

If a prince would worship God in truth, he must remain in his limits, be true to his treaties, be content with what he has, and suffer patiently the privation of what he has not.

Nothing so much resembles flowers planted on a dunghill, as the good which is done to an ignorant or worthless man.

In whatsoever company or society you be, engage not in those matters which concern the whole; for if you succeed, the whole company will attribute the success to itself; and if you succeed not, each person will lay the blame on you.

When the soul is ready to depart, what avails it whether a man die on a throne or in the dust?

Take and give with equity.

We need not be surprised when those who ask or seek for improper things, fall into misfortunes which they did not expect.

Riches dwell no longer in the hand of a liberal man, than patience in the heart of a lover, or water in a sieve.

As soon as a person takes pleasure in hearing slander, he is to be ranked in the number of slanderers.

That which a man suffers for this world, fills his heart with darkness; but that which he suffers for the other, fills it with light.

The greatest repose which a man can enjoy, is that which he feels in desiring nothing.

One seldom finds that which he seeks, when he searches for it with impatience.

Do not reproach a man for the sin which he has committed, when God has forgiven him.

He who pushes a jest farther than good breeding requires, shall never fail to be hated or despised.

He who is worthy of being called a man, is unshaken in adversity, humble in prosperity, active and bold in danger; and, if he be not learned, has at least a love for learning.

The man who is governed by his passions is in a worse state than the most miserable slave.

Men often give themselves much trouble to succeed in an affair from which they derive only vexation in the end.

He is a free man who desires nothing ; and he is a slave who expects that which he wishes.

The advice of a wise man is to be considered as a prediction.

Be sincere, though your sincerity should cost you your life.

Live not on credit, and you shall live in liberty.

A wise man practises the three following things : he abandons the world before it abandons him ; he builds his sepulchre before the time of entering it ; and he does all with a design to please God, before entering into his presence.

He who lords it over those who are below him, shall one day find a master who will lord it over him.

Sin not, if you would have less vexation in the hour of death.

He who takes not counsel beforehand, will surely fail in accomplishing his projects.

Covetousness leads to poverty ; but he is truly rich who desires nothing.

He who relates the faults of others to you, designs to relate yours to them.

Watch your friends ; except those of whom you are certain ; but know, that none can be a true friend but he who has the fear of God.

The most perfect pleasures in this world are always mingled with some bitterness.

He who considers consequences with too much attention, is ordinarily a man of no courage.

The world is the hell of the good, and the heaven of the wicked ; i. e., it is all the evil that the former shall meet with, and all the good that the latter shall enjoy.

By doing good to those who have evil intentions against you, you thereby shut their mouth.

He who knows well what he is capable of, has seldom bad success.

He who has too good an opinion of himself, drives all others away from him.

He who loves jesting and raillery, brings himself into many troubles.

Partial knowledge is better than total ignorance ; if you cannot get what you wish, get what you can.

He who has lost shame may bury his heart.

The poor should get learning in order to become rich ; and the rich should acquire it for their ornament.

A man should accommodate himself to the weakness of his inferiors, in order to derive from them the services he requires.

An avaricious man runs straight into poverty. He leads a life of poverty here below ; but he must give the account of a rich man in the day of judgment.

The greatest advantage that a man can procure for his children, is to have them well educated.

Do good to him who does you evil, and by this means you will gain the victory over him.

Men, because of speech, have the advantage over brutes ; but beasts are preferable to men whose language is indecent.

If you can do good to-day, defer it not till to-morrow.

The excellence of many discourses consists in their brevity.

Two things are inseparable from lying ; many promises and many excuses.

Deceivers, liars, and all persons who lead an irregular life, are intoxicated by the prosperity which smiles upon them in all things ; but that intoxication is the just recompense of their evil actions.

He lives in true repose whobridles his passions.

It is in vain to expect these five things from the following persons : A present from a poor man ; service from a lazy man ; succour from an enemy ; counsel from an envious man ; and true love from a prude.

It is unbecoming the character of a wise man to commit the fault for which he reproves others.

A passionate man is capable of nothing ; how unfit then is such a person for a governor !

A rich man who is not liberal, resembles a tree without fruit.

You cannot keep your own secret ; what cause then have you to complain, if another to whom you have declared it should reveal it !

It is the same with the administration of the affairs of kings as with sea voyages ; you may lose, gain, amass treasures, and lose your life.

He who submits to a voluntary poverty neither possesses, nor is possessed by, any thing.

A wicked man should be considered as dead while he is alive ; but a good man lives even in the tomb.

No man should undertake any thing till he has thoroughly examined it.

He who possesses any art or science, is at least equal to a great lord.

Honours, employments, and dignities cannot recompense a man for the pains he has taken to acquire them.

On many occasions a good book supplies the place of an agreeable companion.

That day in which a man neither does some good action, nor acquires some useful knowledge, should not be (if possible) numbered in the days of his life.

He who is of a surly and unyielding disposition, never fails to excite troubles even among relatives and friends.

A great monarch should fix a good reputation as an object to which he should continually bend his pursuits ; because, of all the grandeurs and eminences of this world, this is the only thing that shall survive him.

Leave not till to-morrow what you can perform to-day.

To have pity on one's enemy, when he is in distress, is the mark of a great soul.

He who does good shall not lose his reward. A good action never perishes, neither before God nor before men.

Covetousness proceeds ad infinitum ; therefore, determine the bounds of your desires, and the objects of your pursuits. He who does not act thus shall never become either rich or happy.

A monarch who considers his own interest should ever abide in his kingdom, and consider himself as a rose in the midst of a garden, which continually reposes on thorns.

Never despise a man because his employment is mean, or his clothing bad. The bee is an insect which is not very pleasing to the sight, yet its hive affords abundance of honey.

The people enjoy repose when governed by princes who take none. The monarch who watches, causes his people to repose in safety.

Confer your opinion with that of another, for truth is more easily discovered by two than one.

Do not rejoice at the death of your enemy; your life is not eternal.

Be always employed, that ye become not slothful; and refer to God all that you acquire by labour, otherwise you shall live in a continual and condemnable idleness.

It is extremely difficult to render him wise who knows nothing; because his ignorance causes him to believe that he knows more than he who attempts to instruct him.

One coat, one house, and one day's food, is enough for you; and should you die at noonday, you will have one half too much.

A covetous man is an enemy to all the poor; and is cursed both in this and the coming world.

Interested friends resemble dogs in public places, who love the bones better than those who throw them.

In order to live well, a man should die to all his passions, and every thing that depends on them.

A thousand years of delight do not deserve the risk of our lives for a single moment.

You shall only receive in proportion to what you give.

The service of kings may be compared to a vast sea, where many merchants traffic, some of whom acquire great riches, and others are shipwrecked.

Fear the man who fears you.

Do nothing without design.

Humble yourself in asking, that you may be raised up in obtaining what you request.

A wicked woman in the house of a good man is a hell to him in this world.

It cannot be said of a miser that he possesses his riches, however attached he may be to them.

The thought of evil frequently derives its origin from idleness.

Kings and subjects are equally unhappy, where persons of merit are despised, and where ignorant men occupy the chief places of trust.

Answer those who ask questions of you in such a manner as not to offend them.

The most proper method of punishing an envious person is, to load him with benefits.

Prudence suffers between impossibility and irresolution.

When you speak, let it be in such a manner as not to require an explanation.

The most precious acquisition is that of a friend.

Never trust to appearance. Behold the drum: notwithstanding all its noise, it is empty within.

Keep not an evil conscience: but be diffident, to the end that you be never surprised nor deceived.

Nothing remains with punishment or reward.

A wise man by his speeches does things which a hundred armies conjoined could not execute.

Do not speak till you have thought on what you intend to say.

Those who believe they may gain by seditions and commotions never fail to excite them.

The best friends we have in this world are the spies of our actions, who publish our faults.

Hope for nothing from this world, and your soul will enjoy rest.

He who applies himself to acquire knowledge, puts himself in the capacity of possessing all good things.

He who does not succeed in the business in which he is employed, because he is incapable of it, deserves to be excused; for it is to be believed that he has done all he could to accomplish his end.

Every kind of employment requires a particular sort of genius.

Riches increase in proportion as you give to the poor.

The greatest reputation is frequently an embarrassment.

Do not despise a poor man because he is such: the lion is not less noble because he is chained.

A young man who has the wisdom of an old man, is considered as an old man among those who are wise.

A righteous prince is the image and shadow of God upon earth.

As soon as virtue begins to discover itself, vice begins its insolent insults.

Can it be said that a man has wisely considered what he has done, when the end corresponds not with what he proposed?

To the end that what you desire may be advantageous to you, never desire any thing but that which is proper for you.

Those who will not forgive an offence are the most accursed of all men.

Though it be pretended that no man can shun his destiny, yet it is well to do nothing without precaution.

It is a double present when given with a cheerful countenance.

Nobility is nothing unless supported by good actions.

Evil speaking and calumny never quit their hold till they have destroyed the innocent on whom they have once seized.

Consider your estate, and leave playing and jesting to children.

Soft words may appease an angry man; bitter words never will.

Would you throw fire on a house in flames to extinguish them?

Continue to speak the truth though you know it to be hateful.

It is a blessing to a house to have a number of guests at table.

Five things are useless when they are not accompanied each with another thing: advice without effect; riches without economy; science without good manners; almsgiving to improper objects, or without a pure intention; and life without health.

If you wish your enemy never to know your secret, never divulge it to your friend.

Art thou a man in honour? Wouldst thou live without inquietude or remorse? Then do actions worthy of thy character.

When subjects are ill treated by subaltern officers, and cannot make remonstrances to the prince, because the too great authority of ministers of state deprives them of the means ; their lot is like to that of a man who, half dead with thirst, approaches the river Nile to drink ; but perceiving a crocodile, is obliged to perish for lack of water, or submit to be devoured.

It is better to perish with hunger, than to deprive the poor of their bread.

If you be reprov'd for your faults, do not be angry with him who does it : but turn your anger against the things for which he has reprov'd you.

Poisonous food is preferable to bad discourse.

Do not discover the faults of others, if you be unwilling to have your own known.

Wage war against yourself, and you will thereby acquire true peace of soul.

One resembles those the company of whom he most frequents.

The best expended riches are those which are given for God's sake.

If you have a dispute with any person, take heed that you say not of him all the evil which you know ; otherwise you will leave no room for accommodation.

Your conversation is the index of your intellect, and your actions show the bottom of your heart.

It is more difficult to manage riches well, than to acquire them.

The grandeur of kings is evidenced in the administration of justice.

Honour your parents, and your children will honour you.

Cultivate no friendship with him who loves your enemy.

If you have a friend who takes offence at trifles, break entirely with him, for he is not to be trusted.

The happiness of life is only to be found, when the conscience is pure and clean.

Measure every man with his own measure ; i. e., "Do not expect or require from him more than is in him."

Can any man boast who considers what he is come from ?

In whatever corner of the world you are, you will have something to suffer.

It will be more profitable for thee to adorn thy inside than thy outside.

The Words of LOCKMAN to his SON.

My son, I wish thee to observe these six maxims which comprehend all the morality of the ancients and moderns.

1. Have no attachment to the world, but in proportion to the short duration of thy life.

2. Serve God with all that fervour which the need thou hast of him demands.

3. Labour for the other life that awaits thee, and consider the time it must endure.

4. Strive to escape that fire, out of which those who are once cast in can never escape.

5. If thou hast temerity enough to sin, measure beforehand the strength thou shalt require to endure the fire of hell, and the chastisements of God.

6. When thou wishest to transgress, seek for a place where God cannot see thee.

The words of ALI to his SONS.

My sons, never despise any person : consider your superior as your father, your equal as your brother, and your inferior as your son.

Words addressed by a Mohammedan to the MESSIAH.

The heart of the afflicted draws all its consolation from thy words.

The soul receives life and vigour at the bare mention of thy name.

If ever the human spirit be rendered capable of contemplating the mysteries of the Divinity, it is thou alone who givest it the light by which it understands, and the attractions by which it is penetrated.

INTRODUCTION

---

THE book, entitled Koheleth, or Ecclesiastes, has ever been received, both by the Jewish and Christian Church, as written under the inspiration of the Almighty ; and was held to be properly a part of the sacred canon. But while this has been almost universally granted, there has been but little unanimity among learned men and critics as to its author. To Solomon it has been most generally attributed, both in ancient and modern times.

Grotius, however, conjectured that it was written a long time after Solomon ; and he says, at the close of his notes on it, that it was revised in the days of Zerubbabel by some learned man, who in the twelfth verse of the last chapter addresses his son Abihud : “ And farther, by these, my son, be admonished.” But such a conjecture appears to have little foundation. This great man was more successful in his criticism on the language of the book ; showing that there are many words in it which do not savour of the purity of the Hebrew tongue ; and are found in the times of the captivity and afterwards, and such as appear principally in the books of Ezra and Daniel.

Calovius has on the other hand, not with so much success as he imagined, argued against Grotius for the purity of the language.

Mr. G. Zirkel of Wurtzburgh published an examination of this book in 1792, in which he endeavours to prove :—

1. That the style of Ecclesiastes is that of the later Hebrew writers, as appears by the Chaldaisms, *Syriasm*s, and Hellenisms that occur in it.

2. That it may have been written between the years 380 and 130 before Jesus Christ, if not later.

The Jena reviewers seem to have thought it to be a translation from the Greek, and to have been written by a Jew of Alexandria, while the famous library was founding by Ptolemy Philadelphus king of Egypt, about the year 240 before Christ. And that it is to this circumstance that chap. xii. 12 alludes, “ Of making many books there is no end ;” which could not have entered into the head of a Palestine Jew ; and such a person might speak with propriety of an Israel in Jerusalem, chap. i. 12, being acquainted with an Israel in Alexandria.

The Jews in general, and St. Jerome, hold the book to be the composition of Solomon, and the fruit of his repentance when restored from his idolatry, into which he had fallen through means of the strange or heathenish women whom he had taken for wives and concubines.

Others, of no mean note, who consider Solomon as the author, believe that he wrote it before his fall ; there being no evidence that he wrote it afterwards ; nor, indeed, that he ever recovered from his fall. Besides, it was in his old age that his wives turned away his heart from God ; and the book bears too many evidences of mental energy to allow the supposition that in his declining age, after so deep a fall from God, he was capable of writing such a treatise. This opinion goes far towards destroying the Divine inspiration of the book; for if he did recover and repent, there is no evidence that God gave him back that Divine inspiration which he before possessed; for we hear of the Lord appearing to him twice before his fall, but of a third appearance there is no intimation. And lastly, Of the restoration of Solomon to the favour of God there is no proof in the sacred history; for in the very place where we are told that “in his old age his wives turned away his heart from the Lord,” we are told of his death, without the slightest intimation of his repentance. See my character of Solomon at the end of 1 Kings xi.

Nothing, however, of this uncertainty can affect either the character, importance, or utility of the book in question. It is a production of singular worth; and the finest monument we have of the wisdom of the ancients, except the book of Job.

But the chief difficulty attending this book is the principle on which it should be interpreted. Some have supposed it to be a dialogue between a true believer and an infidel, which makes it to the unwary reader appear abounding with contradiction, and, in some instances, false doctrine; and that the parts must be attributed to their respective speakers, before interpretation can be successfully attempted. I am not convinced that the book has any such structure; though in some places the opinions and sayings of infidels may be quoted; e. g., chap. vii. 16, and in some of the following chapters.

In the year 1763, M. Desvœux, a learned foreigner then resident in England, and who was in the British service, wrote and published a Philosophical and Poetical Essay on this book, in which he endeavours to prove, that the design of the author was to demonstrate the immortality of the soul; and that it is on this principle alone that the book can be understood and explained.

As a late commentator on the Bible has adopted this plan, and interwoven the major part of this dissertation with his notes on the book, I shall introduce the whole of M. Desvœux's analysis of its contents, the propositions, arguments, proofs, illustrations, corollaries, &c., on the ground of which he attempts its illustration:—

The whole of the discourse (he says) may be reduced to the three following propositions, each of which is attended with its apparatus of proofs and especial observations.

PROPOSITION I.

No labour of man in this world can render him contented, or give him true satisfaction of soul.

PROPOSITION II.

Earthly goods and possessions are so far from making us happy, that they may be even viewed as real obstacles to our ease, quiet, and tranquillity of mind.

PROPOSITION III.

Men know not what is or is not truly advantageous to them; because they are either ignorant or unmindful of that which must come to pass after their death.

The three propositions, with their proofs and illustrations, are contained in the following analysis:—

PROPOSITION I.

Chap. Ver

- i. 2, 3. No labour of man, &c.
- 4–11. First proof.—The course of nature.
- 12, &c. Second proof.—Men's occupations.
- 16–18. First head.—Wisdom or philosophy.
- ii. 1, 2. Second head.—Pleasure.
- 3–10. Both jointly.
- 11. General conclusion of the second proof.
- A review of the second proof with special conclusions, relating to every particular therein mentioned, viz.,

Chap. Ver.

- ii. 12–17. i. Wisdom.
- 18–23. ii. Riches.
- 24–26. iii. Pleasure.
- iii. 1, &c. Third proof.—Inconstancy of men's wills
- 9. Conclusion of the third proof.
- A review of the second and third proofs, considered jointly, with special observations and corollaries.
- 10, 11. First observation.—God is inculpable.
- 12, 15. Second observation.—God is the author of whatever befalls us in this world.

Chap. Ver.

iii. 16, 17. First corollary.—God shall redress all grievances.

18–21. Second corollary.—God must be exalted, and man humbled.

22. Third corollary.—God allows men to enjoy the present life.

iv. 1. Fourth proof.—Men's neglect of proper opportunities, evidenced in several instances, viz.,

Chap. Ver.

iv. 1–3. i. Oppression.

4. ii. Envy.

5, 6. iii. Idleness.

7–12. iv. Avarice.

v. 13–19. v. Misapplication of esteem and regard.

N. B. 1–9 is a digression containing several admonitions, in order to prevent any misconstruction of the foregoing remarks.

10–12. iv. Expensive living.

PROPOSITION II.—Chap. v. 13.

Chap. Ver.

v. 14–17. First proof. Instability of riches.

vi. 18. 2. Second proof. Insufficiency of riches to make men happy.

3–6. Corollary. The fate of an abortive is, on the whole, preferable to that of

Chap. Ver.

vi. 7–9. Third proof. Men's insatiableness.

10, 11. General conclusion from the first and second propositions

PROPOSITION III.—Chap. vi. 12.

Chap. Ver.

vii. 1, &c. First proof. Wrong estimation of things.

A digression, intended, like that ver. 1–9, to prevent any misconstruction of the preceding observations; and containing several advices, together with a strong commendation of him who gives them, in order to enforce the observation of the rules he lays down.

9–12. First advice. Do not blame Providence.

13. Second advice. Do not judge of Providence.

14, 15. Third advice. Submit to Providence.

16–20. Fourth advice. Avoid excesses.

21, 22. Fifth advice. Do not heed idle reports.

23–25. Commendation of the foregoing advices from the author's application of every thing; and especially,

Chap. Ver.

26–29. i. Wickedness and ignorance.

viii. 1–8. ii. Wisdom.

Second proof. Anticipated judgments.

9–14. i. That sin shall go unpunished, because it is so in this world.

ix. 15–6. ii. That life is preferable to death.

7–9. First corollary. Earthly enjoyments are not criminal.

10. Second corollary. We must make a proper use of our faculties.

11–15. Third proof. Judgments that are seemingly right, but entirely false.

16, &c. Fourth proof. Little regard paid to wisdom.

16. i. Past services are forgotten.

ii. The least fault is noticed.

x. 5–19. iii. Favour gets what is due to merit.

20. A caution to prevent the abuse of the preceding remarks

PRACTICAL INFERENCES.

Chap. Ver.

xi. 1–4. i. From the first PROPOSITION,—We must give to earthly goods that stability of which they are capable.

5, 6. ii. From the first and second PROPOSITIONS,—We must, in all our conduct, conform to the design of Providence, and leave the success to God.

Chap. Ver.

xii. 7, 8. iii. From the three PROPOSITIONS, but especially from the third, we must seek for happiness beyond the grave.

9–12. Commendation of the work, from several considerations.

13, 14. CONCLUSION of the whole.

This is the whole of M. Desvœux's Analysis; and I place it here, that the reader who approves of the plan may keep it in view while he is passing through the book. For my own part, I doubt whether the author made any such technical arrangement.

The three propositions which M. Desvœux lays down, and which are so essential to the interpretation he gives of the book, would have been expressly propounded by the inspired writer had he intended such; but they appear nowhere in it, and M. D. is obliged to assume or gather them from the general scope of the work. However, on his plan, he has certainly made a number of judicious observations on different passages, though his translations are generally too bold, and seldom well supported by the original text.

In 1768 was published "Choheleth, or the Royal Preacher, a Poetical Paraphrase of the Book of Ecclesiastes. Most humbly inscribed to the King." 4to. There is no name to this work. The late Rev. John Wesley gives the following account of the work and its author in his Journals :—

"Monday, Feb. 8, 1768. I met with a surprising poem, entitled, Choheleth, or the Preacher: it is a paraphrase in tolerable verse on the book of Ecclesiastes. I really think the author of it (a Turkey merchant) understands both the difficult expressions, and the connection of the whole, better than any other either ancient or modern writer whom I have seen. He was at Lisbon during the great earthquake, just then sitting in his night-gown and slippers. Before he could dress himself, part of the house he was in fell, and blocked him up. By this means his life was saved; for all who had run out were dashed to pieces by the falling houses."

Mr. W. seems to have known the author well, but did not like to tell his name. About the year 1789 that eminent man recommended the work to me, and told me several particulars relative to it, which have escaped my memory. I procured the book the first opportunity, and read it with great satisfaction; and from it derived no small portion of information. Having now examined it anew, I can most cordially subscribe to Mr. Wesley's opinion. I really believe that the author understood both the difficult expressions, and the connection of the whole, better than any other writer, whether ancient or modern, at least known to me. Had it comported with my plan, I should have thought a reprint of his work, with the text, which he does not insert, and a few philological notes, would have been quite sufficient to have given my readers a safe and general view of the whole work and its design; though I can by no means adopt the author's hypothesis, that the book was written by Solomon after he was restored from his grievous apostacy. This is an assumption that never was proved, and never can be.

From the preface to this work I have selected some general observations, which I consider to be important, and subjoin to this introduction; and what I borrow from the work itself I mark with a C, not knowing the author's name. Of the authenticity of the book of Ecclesiastes I have no doubt; but I must say, the language and style puzzle me not a little. Chaldaisms and Syriasms are certainly frequent in it, and not a few Chaldee words and terminations; and the style is such as may be seen in those writers who lived at or after the captivity. If these can be reconciled with the age of Solomon, I have no objection; but the attempts that have been made to deny this, and overthrow the evidence, are in my view often trifling, and generally ineffectual. That Solomon, son of David, might have been the author of the whole matter of this, and a subsequent writer put it in his own language, is a possible case; and were this to be allowed, it would solve all difficulties. Let us place the supposition thus: Solomon said all these things, and they are highly worthy of his wisdom; and a Divine writer, after his time, who does not mention his name, gives us a faithful version of the whole in his own language.

On other subjects relative to this book, the author of Choheleth shall speak for me.

"I. Not to perplex our readers with the various expositions of the word Choheleth, the title of the book in the original, (for in truth we can find none better or more significant than that commonly received, viz., Ecclesiastes, or the Preacher,) let us now come to the book itself. Nothing can be more interesting than the subject it treats of, to wit, the chief or sovereign good which man, as a rational and accountable being, should here propose to himself. Every human creature, it is certain, naturally aims at happiness; but though all apply themselves with equal ardour to this desirable end, yet such is the violence of passion, and want of reflection in the generality of mankind, that the means they use for obtaining it, instead of conducting them to the safe and direct road, only serve to mislead and bewilder them in dark and intricate labyrinths, where it is impossible to find what they seek for. Now as it was absolutely necessary to convince such men of the vanity of their pursuits, in order to induce them to turn back in the right way, Solomon shows, in the first place, what is not happiness, and then what really is. Like a skilful physician, he searches deeply into the latent cause of the malady, and then prescribes a radical cure.

“II. In the former disquisition he enumerates all those particulars which mankind are most apt to fix their hearts upon, and shows, from his own dear-bought experience, and the transient and unsatisfactory nature of the things themselves, that no such thing as solid felicity is to be found in any of them. What he asserts on this head carries with it the greater weight, as no man upon earth was ever better qualified to speak decisively on such a subject, considering the opportunities he had of enjoying to the utmost all that this world affords. After having thus cleared away the obstacles to happiness, he enters on the main point, which is to direct us how and where it may be found. This he affirms, at the conclusion of the book, where he recapitulates the sum and substance of the sermon, as some not improperly have styled it, consists in a religious and virtuous life, with which, as he frequently intimates, a man in the lowest circumstances may be happy, and without which one in the highest must be miserable. As the whole book tends to this single point, so, in discussing thereof, many excellent observations are interspersed relating to the various duties of life, from the highest to the lowest station; the advantages resulting even from poverty; the genuine use of riches, and extreme folly of abusing them; the unequal dispensations of Divine Providence; the immortality of the human soul; and great day of final retribution. All these noble and important subjects are treated of in such a style and manner as nothing among the ancients can parallel.

“We have here given the genuine character of this inestimable piece; yet such has been the ignorance, inattention, or depravity of some persons, that it would be hard to find an instance of any thing written on so serious and interesting a subject, which has been so grossly misrepresented. How often has a handle been taken from certain passages, ill understood, and worse applied, to patronise libertinism, by such as pretend to judge of the whole from a single sentence, independent of the rest, without paying the least regard to the general scope or design! According to which rule the most pious discourse that ever was written may be perverted to atheism. Some fanatics have fallen into the contrary extreme; for, on reading that all here below was vanity, they have been so wrong-headed, as to condemn every thing as evil in itself. This world, according to them, cannot be too bitterly inveighed against; and man has nothing else to do with it, but to spend his days in sighing and mourning. But it is evident that nothing could be farther from the preacher’s intention: for notwithstanding he speaks so feelingly of the instability and unsatisfactory nature of all sublunary things, and the vanity of human cares, schemes, and contrivances; yet, lest any one should mistake his meaning, he advises every man, at the same time, to reap the fruit of his honest labours, and take the comfort of what he possesses with a sober freedom and cheerful spirit. Not to harass and disturb his mind with anxious cares and restless solitudes about future events; but to pass the short space which Heaven has allotted him here, as pleasantly as his station will admit, with a quiet conscience. He does not condemn the things themselves, such as science, prudence, mirth, riches, honours, &c.; but only their abuse, that is, the useless studies, unreasonable pursuits, and immoderate desires, of those who pervert God’s blessings to their own destruction.

“On this head Solomon gives his sentiments, not only as a divine and philosopher, but like one thoroughly acquainted with the foibles of the human heart. It was not his design to drive people out of the world, or to make them live wretchedly in it; but only that they should think and act like rational creatures; or, in other words, be induced to consult their own happiness.

“There is nothing in the whole body of pagan philosophy so elevated and magnificent, as what some have written on the important subject of this poem: but we find their opinions so various and contradictory, and the most plausible so blended with errors, even those of the divine Plato not excepted, that their sublimest sentiments on the sovereign good or ultimate happiness of man, when compared with those of the royal preacher, not only appear cold and languid, but always leave the mind unsatisfied and restless. We are lost in a pompous flow of words; and dazzled, but not illuminated. One sect, by confining happiness to sensual pleasures, so greatly slackened the cord as to render it wholly useless: another, by their too austere and rigid maxims, stretched it so tight that it snapped asunder; though the experience of all ages has evinced that these latter imposed both on themselves and the world, when they taught that virtue, however afflicted here, was its own reward, and sufficient of itself to render a man completely happy. Even in the brazen bull of Perillus, truth will cry out from the rack against such fallacious teachers, and prove them liars. The extravagant figments, therefore, of the stoical apathy, no less than those of the voluptuous epicurean, both equally vanish at the splendour of the Divine truth delivered by Solomon. He alone decides the great question in such a manner that the soul is instantly convinced; it need seek no farther.

“III. To prevent all misapprehensions, which a slight and cursory reading of this book is apt to raise in many persons, it will be requisite to observe two cautions: First, that Solomon, who tells us that he applied his heart not only to the search of wisdom and knowledge, but also of folly and madness, frequently speaks, not according to his own sentiments, though he proposes the thing in a naked and simple manner, designedly making use of such terms as might set the picture in a fuller and clearer light, so that we often meet with certain expressions which, unless we search into their true design, seem to have a quite different force and meaning from what the author really intended. We must therefore take particular care to distinguish the doubts and objections of others from Solomon’s answers; the want of attending to which has made this book much more obscure than otherwise it would appear. Secondly, we should not judge of the entire discourse from some parts of it; since many things are pertinently said, according to the present subject, which, in themselves, and strictly taken, are far from true. In order to come at the genuine sense, we should form our opinion from the different circumstances of the matter treated of, comparing the antecedent with the consequent passages, and always considering the preacher’s real scope and design. By carefully attending to these two cautions, this book will be seen in a very different light from what it now appears in to the generality of readers.

“IV. This book, besides the figurative and proverbial expressions to be found in no other part of the Scripture, is undoubtedly metrical; and, consequently, the grammatization, in many places, not a little perplexed, from the frequent ellipses, abbreviations, transposition of words, and other poetical licenses, allowed in all languages; to say nothing of the carelessness or ignorance of transcribers, as appears from the variety of readings. Yet, notwithstanding we are so little acquainted with the nature of the Hebrew metre, and the propriety of certain phrases which, at this vast distance of time, in a language that has been dead upwards of two thousand years, must unavoidably occasion the same difficulties and obscurities as occur in works of far less antiquity, and in languages more generally studied and better understood; notwithstanding this, I say, a diligent and attentive observer will always find enough to recompense his trouble; and, if he has any taste, cannot avoid being struck with the exquisite beauty and regularity of the plan.

“V. The most judicious commentators have remarked on this book, that we have here a conspicuous example of that form of disputing, which was so justly admired in the soundest of the pagan philosophers; particularly in Socrates, who, whilst others were taken up with abstruse speculations about the nature of things, and investigating the number, motions, distance, and magnitude of the stars, brought down philosophy from the upper regions, and fixed its abode on earth; that is, by teaching such precepts as served for the regulation of life and manners, by far the most useful of all sciences, as being most conducive to the welfare of society, and the general benefit of mankind. Of this we have a noble specimen in the memoirs of that ancient moralist, collected by Xenophon. It is, I think, beyond all contradiction, that no one ever made deeper researches into nature, or had made so great a progress in every branch of science, both speculative and experimental. But what, after all, was the result of his inquiries? A thorough conviction of the inutility of such studies, and how little they conduce towards the obtaining that peace and tranquillity of mind wherein true happiness consists. He applied himself, therefore, to that study which might produce a real and lasting advantage, namely, to render men wise to some purpose; that is, truly virtuous. The manner of his treating this important subject bears some resemblance to that of the celebrated Greek moralist. He does not give us a long roll of dry formal precepts, with which the mind is soon tired; but, to confirm the truth of every thing he says, appeals, not only to his own experience, but to the general sense of unbiassed reason. At the same time he sets before us, in the liveliest colours, the sad effects of vice and folly; and makes use of every incentive to engage the heart to be enamoured with virtue, and pursue its own interest. Whatever he intends to inculcate is first barely proposed, and then more accurately explained and illustrated, though by gentle and almost imperceptible transitions; with this peculiarity, that there is always much more implied than expressed; insomuch that the reader, from a slight hint given him, is left to draw such inferences as his own reflection must naturally suggest. Every thing, in short, is drawn, in this admirable composition, with equal simplicity and elegance; and hath as distinguished a superiority to whatever the best pagan philosophers have given us on the same subject, as the borrowed light of the moon is surpassed by that of the sun in his full meridian lustre; or, to use a still stronger comparison, as Solomon's knowledge of the one true God excelled the idle notion of their fictitious deities."

Some have supposed that the book of Ecclesiastes is a poem. That some poetic lines may be found in it, there is no doubt; but it has nothing in common with poetic books, nor does it exist in the hemistich form in any printed edition or MS. yet discovered. It is plain prose, and is not susceptible of that form in which the Hebrew poetic books appear.

The author already quoted thinks that the book of Ecclesiastes is metrical. I cannot see this: but it has what is essential to poetry, a truly dignified style; there are no mean, creeping words in it, whether pure Hebrew, or borrowed from any of its dialects. They are all well chosen, nervous, and highly expressive. They are, in short, such as become the subject, and are worthy of that inspiration by which the author was guided.

NOTES ON CHAP. I.

Verse 1. The words of the Preacher] Literally, "The words of Choheleth, son of David, king of Jerusalem." But the Targum explains it thus: "The words of the prophecy, which Choheleth prophesied; the same is Solomon, son of David the king, who was in Jerusalem. For when Solomon, king of Israel, saw by the spirit of prophecy that the kingdom of Rehoboam his son was about to be divided with Jeroboam, the son of Nebat; and the house of the sanctuary was about to be destroyed, and the people of Israel sent into captivity; he said in his word—Vanity of vanities is all that I have laboured, and David my father; they are altogether vanity."

The word קהלת Koheleth is a feminine noun, from the root קהל kahal, to collect, gather together, assemble; and means, she who assembles or collects a congregation; translated by the Septuagint, Εκκλησιαστής, a public speaker, a speaker in an assembly; and hence translated by us a preacher. In my old MS. Bible it is explained thus: a talker to the peple; or τογυδερ elepfug.

Verse 2. Vanity of vanities] As the words are an exclamation, it would be better to translate, O vanity of vanities! Emptiness of emptinesses. True, substantial good is not to be found in any thing liable to change and corruption.

The author referred to in the introduction begins his paraphrase thus:—

"O vain deluding world! whose largest gifts
Thine emptiness betray, like painted clouds,
Or watery bubbles: as the vapour flies,
Dispersed by lightest blast, so fleet thy joys,
And leave no trace behind. This serious truth
The royal preacher loud proclaims, convinced
By sad experience; with a sigh repeats
The mournful theme, that nothing here below
Can solid comfort yield: 'tis all a scene
Of vanity, beyond the power of words
To express, or thought conceive. Let every man Survey himself, then ask, what fruit remains
Of all his fond pursuits! What has he gain'd,
By toiling thus for more than nature's wants Require? Why thus with endless projects rack'd
His heated brain, and to the labouring mind,
Repose denied? Why such expense of time,
That steals away so fast, and ne'er looks back!

Could man his wish obtain, how short the space
For his enjoyment! No less transient here
The time of his duration, than the things

Thus anxiously pursued. For, as the mind, In search of bliss, fix'd on no solid point, For ever fluctuates; so our little frames, In which we glory, haste to their decline, Nor permanence can find. The human race Drop like autumnal leaves, by spring revived: One generation from the stage of life Withdraws, another comes, and thus makes room For that which follows. Mightiest realms decay, Sink by degrees; and lo! new form'd estates Rise from their ruins. Even the earth itself, Sole object of our hopes and fears, Shall have its period, though to man unknown."

Verse 3. What profit hath a man] What is the sum of the real good he has gained by all his toils in life? They, in themselves, have neither made him contented nor happy.

Verse 4. One generation passeth away] Men succeed each other in unceasing generations: but the earth is still the same; it undergoes no change that leads to melioration, or greater perfection. And it will continue the same לעולם leolam, during the whole course of time; till the end of all things arrives.

Verses 5 and 6. These verses are confused by being falsely divided. The first clause of the sixth should be joined to the fifth verse.

"The sun also ariseth, and the sun goeth down, and hasteth to his place' where he ariseth; going to the south, and circulating to the north."

Verse 6. "The wind is continually whirling about, and the wind returneth upon its whirlings."

It is plain, from the clause which I have restored to the fifth verse, that the author refers to the approximations of the sun to the northern and southern tropics, viz., of Cancer and Capricorn.

All the versions agree in applying the first clause of the sixth verse to the sun, and not to the wind. Our version alone has mistaken the meaning. My old MS. Bible is quite correct:

The sunne riseth up, and goth down, and to his place turneth again; and there again rising, goth about to the south, and then again to the north.

The author points out two things here: 1. Day and night, marked by the appearance of the sun above the horizon; proceeding apparently from east to west; where he sinks under the horizon, and appears to be not utter it: <sup>1</sup> the eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing.

9 <sup>m</sup> The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done: and there is no new thing under the sun.

10 Is there any thing whereof it may be said, See, this is new? it hath been already of old time, which was before us.

11 There is no remembrance of former

lost during the night. 2. His annual course through the twelve signs of the zodiac, when, from the equinoctial, he proceeds southward to the tropic of Capricorn; and thence turneth about towards the north, till he reaches the tropic of Cancer; and so on.

Verse 7. All the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full] The reason is, nothing goes into it either by the rivers or by rain, that does not come from it: and to the place whence the rivers come, whether from the sea originally by evaporation, or immediately by rain, thither they return again; for the water exhaled from the sea by evaporation is collected in the clouds, and in rain, &c., falls upon the tops of the mountains; and, filtered through their fissures, produce streams, several of which uniting, make rivers, which flow into the sea. The water is again evaporated by the sun; the vapours collected are precipitated; and, being filtered through the earth, become streams, &c., as before.

Verse 8. All things are full of labour] It is impossible to calculate how much anxiety, pain, labour, and fatigue are necessary in order to carry on the common operations of life. But an endless desire of gain, and an endless curiosity to witness a variety of results, cause men to labour on. The eye sees much; but wishes to see more. The ear hears of many things; but is curious to have the actual knowledge of them. So desire and curiosity carry men, under the Divine providence, through all the labours and pains of life.

Verse 9. The thing that hath been] Every thing in the whole economy of nature has its revolutions; summer and winter, heat and cold, rain and drought, seedtime and autumn, with the whole system of corruption and generation, alternately succeed each other, so that whatever has been shall be again. There is really, physically, and philosophically, nothing absolutely new under the sun, in the course of sublunary things. The same is the case in all the revolutions of the heavens.

Verse 10. Is there any thing, &c.] The original is beautiful. "Is there any thing which will say, See this! it is new?" Men may say this of their discoveries, &c.; but universal nature says, It is not new. It has been, and it will be.

Verse 11. There is no remembrance] I believe the general meaning to be this: Multitudes of ancient transactions have been lost, because they were not

A. M. cir. 3027. things; neither shall there be
B. C. cir. 977. any remembrance of things that recorded; and of many that have been recorded, the records are lost. And this will be the case with many others which are yet to occur. How many persons, not much acquainted with books, have supposed that certain things were their own discoveries, which have been written or printed even long before they were born! Dutens, in his Origin of the Discoveries attributed to the Moderns, has made a very clear case.

Verse 12. I the Preacher was king] This is a strange verse, and does not admit of an easy solution. It is literally, "I, Chohcleth, have been king over Israel, in Jerusalem." This book, as we have already seen, has been conjectured by some to have been written about the time that Ptolemy Philadelphus formed his great library at Alexandria, about two hundred and eighty-five years before our Lord; and from the multitude of Jews that dwelt there, and resorted to that city for the sake of commerce, it was said there was an Israel in Alexandria. See the introduction.

It has also been conjectured from this, that if the book were written by Solomon, it was intended to be a posthumous publication. "I that was king, still continue to preach and instruct you." Those who suppose the book to have been written after Solomon's fall, think that he speaks thus through humility. "I was once worthy of the name of king: but I fell into all evil; and, though recovered, I am no longer worthy of the name." I am afraid this is not solid.

Verse 13. And I gave my heart to seek and search] While Solomon was faithful to his God, he diligently cultivated his mind. His giving himself to the study of natural history, philosophy, poetry, &c., are sufficient proofs of it. He had not intuitive knowledge from God; but he had a capacity to obtain every kind of knowledge useful to man.

This sore travail] This is the way in which knowledge is to be acquired; and in order to investigate the operations of nature, the most laborious discussions and perplexing experiments must be instituted, and conducted to their proper results. It is God's determination that knowledge shall be acquired in no other way.

16 I communed with mine own heart, saying, Lo, I am come to great estate, and have gotten <sup>s</sup> more wisdom than all they that have been before me in Jerusalem: yea, my heart <sup>t</sup> had great experience of wisdom and knowledge.

17 <sup>u</sup> And I gave my heart to know wisdom and to know madness and folly: I perceived that this also is vexation of spirit

Verse 14. Behold, all is vanity] After all these discussions and experiments, when even the results have been the most successful, I have found only rational satisfaction; but not that supreme good by which alone the soul can be made happy.

O curas hominum! O quantum est in rebus inane!

"How anxious are our cares, and yet how vain
The bent of our desires!"

PERS. Sat. i., v. 1.

Verse 15. That which is crooked cannot be made straight] There are many apparent irregularities and anomalies in nature for which we cannot account; and there are many defects that cannot be supplied. This is the impression from a general view of nature; but the more we study and investigate its operations, the more we shall be convinced that all is a consecutive and well-ordered whole; and that in the chain of nature not one link is broken, deficient, or lost.

Verse 16. I communed with mine own heart] Literally, "I spoke, I, with my heart, saying." When successful in my researches, but not happy in my soul, though easy in my circumstances, I entered into my own heart, and there inquired the cause of my discontent. He found that, though—1. He had gotten wisdom beyond all men; 2. Wealth and honours more than any other; 3. Practical wisdom more than all his predecessors; 4. Had tried pleasure and animal gratification, even to their extremes; yet after all this he had nothing but vexation of spirit. None of these four things, nor the whole of them conjoined, could afford him such a happiness as satisfies the soul. Why was all this? Because the soul was made for God, and in the possession of him alone can it find happiness.

Verse 17. To know madness and folly] הוללות ושכלות holloth vesichluth. Παραβολας και επιστημην, "Parables and science."—Septuagint. So the Syriac; nearly so the Arabic. "What were error and foolishness."—Coverdale. Perhaps gayety and sobriety may be the better meaning for these two difficult words. I can scarcely think they are taken in that bad sense in which our translation exhibits them. "I tried pleasure in all its forms; and sobriety and self-abnegation to their utmost extent." Choheleth paraphrases, "Even fools and madmen taught me rules."

Verse 18. For in much wisdom is much grief] The more we know of ourselves the less satisfied shall we be with our own hearts; and the more we know of mankind the less willing shall we be to trust them, and the less shall we admire them.

He that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow.] And why so? Because, independently of God, the principal objects of knowledge are natural and moral evils.

The Targum gives a curious paraphrase here: "The man who multiplies wisdom, when he sins and is not converted to repentance, multiplies the indignation of God against himself; and the man who adds science, and yet dies in his childhood, adds grief of heart to his relatives." A man in science; a foolish child in conduct. How pained must they be who had the expense of his education! But there are many men-children of this sort in every age and country.

CHAPTER II.

The vanity of human courses in the works of pleasure, planting, building, equipage, amassing wealth, &c., 1-11. Wisdom preferable to folly, 12-14; yet little difference between the wise and the foolish in the events of life, 15-17. The vanity of amassing wealth for heirs, when whether they will be foolish or wise cannot be ascertained, 18-21. There is much sorrow in the labour of man, 22, 23. We should enjoy what the providence of God gives, 25, 26.

NOTES ON CHAP. II

Verse 1. I will prove thee with mirth] This is well expressed by the author so often referred to. Having tried speculative knowledge in vain, passion and appetite whisper,—

"From the rugged thorny road
Of wisdom, which so ill repays thy toil,
Turn back, and enter pleasure's flowery paths.
Go, take thy fill of joy; to passion give
The reins; nor let one serious thought restrain
What youth and affluence prompt."

Verse 2. I said of laughter, It is mad] Literally, "To laughter I said, O mad one! and to mirth, What is this one doing?"

Solomon does not speak here of a sober enjoyment of the things of this world, but of intemperate pleasure, whose two attendants, laughter and mirth are introduced by a beautiful prosopopæia as two persons; and the contemptuous manner wherewith he treats them has something remarkably striking. He tells the former to her face that she is mad; but as to the latter, he thinks her so much beneath his notice, that he only points at her, and instantly turns his back.

Verse 3. To give myself unto wine, (yet acquainting [נהג] noheg, "guiding"] mine heart with wisdom,] see what was that good for the sons of men, which they should do under the heaven <sup>f</sup> all the days of their life.

4 I made me great works; I builded me houses; I planted me vineyards:

5 I made me gardens and orchards, and I planted trees in them of all kind of fruits:

6 I made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees:

I did not run into extremes, as when I gave up myself to mirth and pleasure. There, I threw off all restraint; here, I took the middle course, to see whether a moderate enjoyment of the things of the world might not produce that happiness which I supposed man was created to enjoy here below.

Verse 4. I builded me houses] Palace after palace; the house of the forest of Lebanon, 1 Kings vii. 1, &c.; a house for the queen; the temple, &c., 2 Chron. viii. 1, &c.; 1 Kings ix. 10, &c., besides many other buildings of various kinds.

Verse 5. I made me gardens and orchards] פֶּרְדֵּסִים pardesim, "paradises." I doubt much whether this be an original Hebrew word פֶּרְדֵּסִים ferdoos, is found in the Persian and Arabic; and signifies a pleasant garden, a vineyard. Hence our word paradise, a place full of delights. How well Solomon was qualified to form gardens, orchards, vineyards, conservatories, &c., may be at once conceived when we recollect his knowledge of natural history; and that he wrote treatises on vegetables and their properties, from the cedar to the hyssop.

Verse 6. Pools of water] Tanks and reservoirs.

To water therewith the wood] Aqueducts to lead the water from the tanks to different parts.

Verse 7. Servants and maidens] For my works, fields, folds, and various domestic labours.

Servants born in my house] Besides those hired from without, he had married couples in the precincts of his grounds, palaces, &c., who, when their children grew up, got them employment with themselves.

Great and small cattle] Oxen, neat, horses, asses, mules, camels, and such like; with sheep and goats.
And multitudes of most of these he needed, when we are told that his household consumed daily ten stall-fed oxen, with twenty from the pasture, with a hundred sheep; besides harts, roebucks, fallow deer, fatted fowls, and other kinds of provision. Probably, such another court for splendour and expense was not in the universe.

Verse 8. The peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces] 1. The taxes levied off his subjects. 2.
The tribute given by the neighbouring potentates.
Both these make the "peculiar treasure of kings;"
taxes and tribute.

Men singers and women singers] This includes all instrumental and vocal performers. These may be called the delights of the sons of men.

Musical instruments, and that of all sorts.] For these seven words, there are only two in the original, שרה ושרות shiddah veshiddoth. These words are acknowledged on all hands to be utterly unknown, if not utterly inexplicable. Some render them male and female captives; others, cups and flagons; others, cooks and confectioners; others, a species of musical compositions derived from a celebrated Phœnician woman named Sido, to whom Sanehoniatho attributes the invention of music. Others, with more probability, wives and concubines; of the former of whom Solomon had three hundred, and of the latter, seven hundred; and if these be not spoken of here, they are not mentioned at all; whereas music, and every thing connected with that, was referred to before. The author of Chokeleth paraphrases thus:—

"To complete

This scene of earthly bliss, how large a span
Of that which most delights the sons of men

11 Then I looked on all the works that my hands had wrought, and on the labour that I had laboured to do: and, behold, all was <sup>m</sup> vanity and vexation of spirit, and there was no profit under the sun.

12 And I turned myself to behold wisdom, <sup>n</sup> and madness, and folly: for what can the man do that cometh after the king? <sup>o</sup> even that which hath been already done.

13 Then I saw <sup>p</sup> that wisdom excelleth folly, as far as light excelleth darkness.

<sup>n</sup> Chap. i. 17; vii. 25.—<sup>o</sup> Or, in those things which have been than in folly, &c.

Fell to my portion! What a lovely train
Of blooming beauties, by connubial ties,
By purchase, or the gifts of neighbouring kings,
Or spoils of war, made mine."

If, after all this, I may add one conjecture, it shall be this; שרה sadch, in Hebrew, is a field, and occurs in various parts of the Bible. שדות sadoth is fields, 1 Sam. xxii. 7, the points in such a case are of no consideration. May not Solomon be speaking here of farms upon farms, or estates upon estates, which he had added by purchase to the common regal portion?
We know that a king of Israel (Ahab) once desired to have a vineyard (Naboth's) which he could not obtain: now, Solomon having spoken before of gardens, orchards, and vineyards, why may he not here speak of supernumerary estates? Perhaps every man who critically examines the place will be dissatisfied, and have a conjecture of his own.

Verse 10. I withheld not my heart from any joy]
He had every means of gratification; he could desire nothing that was not within his reach; and whatever he wished, he took care to possess.

Verse 11. And, behold, all was vanity] Emptiness and insufficiency in itself.

And vexation of spirit] Because it promised the good I wished for, but did not, could not, perform the promise; and left my soul discontented and chagrined.

Verse 12. For what can the man do that cometh after the king?] I have examined every thing proposed by science, by maddening pleasure, and by more refined and regulated mirth. I seized on the whole, and used them to the uttermost; and so far, that none ever shall be able to exceed me; as none can, in the course of things, ever have such power and means of gratification.

Verse 13. Then I saw that wisdom excelleth folly] Though in none of these pursuits I found the supreme good, the happiness my soul longed after; yet I could easily perceive that wisdom excelled the others, as far as light excels darkness. And he immediately sub-joins the reasons.

16 For there is no remembrance of the wise more than of the fool for ever ; seeing that which now is in the days to come shall all be forgotten. And how dieth the <sup>t</sup> wise man ? as the fool.

17 Therefore I hated life ; because the work that is wrought under the sun is grievous unto me : for all is vanity and vexation of spirit.

Verse 14. The wise man's eyes, &c.] Well expressed by Choheleth :—

"The wise are circumspect, maturely weigh
The consequence of what they undertake,
Good ends propose, and fittest means apply
To accomplish their designs."

But the fool walketh in darkness]

"But fools, deprived
Of reason's guidance, or in darkness grope,
Or, unreflecting like a frantic man,
Who on the brink of some steep precipice
Attempts to run a race with heedless steps,
Rush to their own perdition."

One event happeneth to them all.]

"Though wide the difference, what has human pride
To boast ? Even I myself too plainly saw,
That one event to both alike befalls ;
To various accidents of life exposed,
Without distinction : nor can wisdom screen
From dangers, disappointments, grief, and pain."

Verse 15. As it happeneth to the fool] Literally, "According as the event is to the fool, it happens to me, even me." There is a peculiar beauty and emphasis in the repetition of me. Having pointed out the advantages that wisdom has over folly, he takes this opportunity of reminding us of the danger of trusting too much to it, by showing that it is equally subject to the common accidents of life ; and, therefore, incapable of making us completely happy. Having given his sentiments on this point in general terms, he proceeds to those particular instances wherein human prudence chiefly exerts itself ; and shows how egregiously it is mistaken in every one of them.—C.

Verse 16. There is no remembrance] The wise and 19 And who knoweth whether he shall be a wise man or a fool ? yet shall he have rule over all my labour wherein I have laboured, and wherein I have showed myself wise under the sun. This is also vanity.

20 Therefore I went about to cause my heart to despair of all the labour which I took under the sun.

21 For there is a man whose labour is in wisdom, and in knowledge, and in equity ; yet to a man that hath not laboured therein shall he <sup>w</sup> leave it for his portion. This also is vanity and a great evil.

22 <sup>x</sup> For what hath man of all his labour, the fool are equally subject to death ; and, in most instances, they are equally forgotten. Time sweeps away all remembrances, except the very few out of millions which are preserved for a while in the page of history.

Verse 17. Therefore I hated life] אֵת הַחַיִּים et hachaiyim, the lives, both of the wise, the madman, and the fool. Also all the stages of life, the child, the man, and the sage. There was nothing in it worth pursuing, no period worth re-living, and no hope that if this were possible I could again be more successful.

Verse 18. I hated all my labour] Because, 1. It has not answered the end for which it was instituted. 2. I can enjoy the fruits of it but a short time. 3. I must leave it to others, and know not whether a wise man, a knave, or a fool will possess it.

Verse 19. A wise man or a fool ?] Alas ! Solomon, the wisest of all men, made the worst use of his wisdom, had three hundred wives and seven hundred concubines, and yet left but one son behind him, to possess his estates and his throne, and that one was the silliest of fools !

Verse 20. I went about to cause my heart to despair] What makes all worse, there is no remedy. It is impossible in the present state of things to prevent these evils.

Verse 21. For there is a man] Does he not allude to himself ? As if he had said, "I have laboured to cultivate my mind in wisdom and in science, in knowledge of men and things, and have endeavoured to establish equity and dispense justice. And now I find I shall leave all the fruits of my labour to a man that hath not laboured therein, and consequently cannot prize what I have wrought." Does he not refer to his son Rehoboam ?

24 <sup>z</sup> There is nothing better for a man than that he should eat and drink, and that he <sup>a</sup> should make his soul enjoy good in his labour. This also I saw,

Verse 23. His days are sorrows] What a picture of human life where the heart is not filled with the peace and love of God! All his days are sorrows; all his labours griefs; all his nights restless; for he has no portion but merely what earth can give; and that is embittered by the labour of acquisition, and the disappointment in the using.

This is also vanity.] Emptiness of good and substantial misery.

Verse 24. There is nothing better for a man] The sense of this passage is well expressed in the following lines:—

“For these disorders wouldst thou find a cure,
Such cure as human frailty would admit!
Drive from thee anxious cares; let reason curb Thy passions; and with cheerful heart enjoy
That little which the world affords; for here,
Though vain the hopes of perfect happiness,
Yet still the road of life, rugged at best,
Is not without its comforts.—

Wouldst thou their sweetness taste, look up to heaven,

And praise the all-bounteous Donor, who bestows
The power to use aright.”

Verse 25. For who can eat —more than I?] But instead of חוץ ממני chuts mimmeni, more than I; חוץ ממנו chuts mimnenu, without him, is the reading of eight of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., as also of the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic.

that it was from the hand of God.

25 For who can eat, or who else can hasten hereunto, more than I?

26 For God giveth to a man that is good <sup>b</sup> in his sight, wisdom, and knowledge, and joy: but to the sinner he giveth travail, to gather and to heap up, that <sup>c</sup> he may give to him that is good before God. This also is vanity and vexation of spirit.

“For who maye eat, drynke, or bring enythinge to pass without him?”—COVERDALE.

I believe this to be the true reading. No one can have a true relish of the comforts of life without the Divine blessing. This reading connects all the sentences: “This also I saw, that it was from the hand of God;—for who can eat, and who can relish without him? For God giveth to man that is good.” It is through his liberality that we have any thing to eat or drink; and it is only through his blessing that we can derive good from the use of what we possess.

Verse 26. Giveth—wisdom, and knowledge, and joy] 1. God gives wisdom—the knowledge of himself, light to direct in the way of salvation. 2. Knowledge—understanding to discern the operation of his hand; experimental acquaintance with himself, in the dispensing of his grace and the gifts of his Spirit. 3. Joy; a hundred days of ease for one day of pain; one thousand enjoyments for one privation; and to them that believe, peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

But to the sinner he giveth travail] He has a life of labour, disappointment, and distress; for because he is an enemy to God, he travails in pain all his days; and, as the wise man says elsewhere, the wealth of the wicked is laid up for the just. So he loseth earthly good, because he would not take a heavenly portion with it.

NOTES ON CHAP. III.

Verse 1. To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose] Two general remarks may be made on the first eight verses of this chapter. 1. God by his providence governs the world, and has determined particular things and operations to particular times. In those times such things may be done with propriety and success; but if we neglect the appointed seasons, we sin against this providence, and become the authors of our own distresses. 2. God has given to man that portion of duration called TIME; the space in which all the operations of nature, of animals, and intellectual beings, are carried on; but while nature is steady in its course, and animals faithful to their instincts, man devotes it to a great variety of purposes; but very frequently to that for which God never made time, space, or opportunity. And all we can say, when an evil deed is done, is, there was a time in which it was done, though God never made it for that purpose.

To say any farther on this subject is needless, as the words themselves give in general their own meaning. The Jews, it is true, see in these times and seasons all the events of their own nation, from the birth of Abraham to the present times; and as to fathers and their followers, they see all the events and states of the Christian Church in them!

It is worthy of remark, that in all this list there are but two things which may be said to be done generally by the disposal of God, and in which men can have but little influence: the time of birth, and the time of death. But all the others are left to the option of man, though God continues to overrule them by his providence. The following paraphrase will explain all that is necessary to be generally understood:—

Verse 2. A time to be born, and a time to die—plant]

“As in its mother’s womb the embryo lies
A space determined; to full growth arrived,
From its dark prison bursts, and sees the light;
So is the period fix’d when man shall drop
Into the grave.—A time there is to plant,
And sow; another time to pluck and reap.
Even nations have their destined rise and fall:
Awhile they thrive; and for destruction ripe,
When grown, are rooted up like wither’d plants.”

Verse 3. A time to kill,—heal,—break down,—build up.

5 A time to cast away stones, and a time to gather stones together; a time to embrace, and a time to refrain from embracing;

6 A time to get, and a time to lose; a time to keep, and a time to cast away;

7 A time to rend, and a time to sew; a time to keep silence, and a time to speak;

8 A time to love, and a time to hate; a time of war, and a time of peace.

* Heb. to be far from.—<sup>f</sup> Or, seek.—<sup>g</sup> Amos v. 13.—<sup>h</sup> Luke xiv. 26.

“The healing art, when out of season used,
Pernicious proves, and serves to hasten death.
But timely medicines drooping nature raise,
And health restore.—Now, Justice wields her sword
With wholesome rigour, nor the offender spares:
But Mercy now is more expedient found.
On crazy fabrics ill-timed cost bestow’d
No purpose answers, when discretion bids
To pull them down, and wait a season fit
To build anew.”

Verse 4. A time to weep,—laugh,—mourn,—dance]

“When private griefs affect
The heart, our tears with decent sorrow flow:
Nor less becoming, when the public mourns,
To vent the deepest sighs. But all around
When things a smiling aspect bear, our souls
May well exult; ’tis then a time for joy.”

Verse 5. A time to cast away stones,—to gather stones,—to embrace,—to refrain]

“One while domestic cares abortive prove,
And then successful. Nature now invites Connubial pleasures: but, when languid grown,
No less rejects.”

Verse 6. A time to get,—to lose,—to keep,—to cast away]

“Commerce produces wealth,
Whilst time of gaining lasts; from every point Blow prosperous gales. Now heaven begins to lower,
And all our hopes are blasted. Prudence bids,
One while, our treasure to reserve, and then
With liberal hand to scatter wide. How oft
In raging storms, the owner wisely casts
Into the deep his precious merchandise,
To save the foundering bark!

Verse 7. A time to rend,—sew,—keep silence,—speak]

“Intestine broils
And factions rend a state: at length the breach
Is heal’d, and rest ensues. Wisdom restrains
The tongue, when words are vain: but now,
’Tis time to speak, and silence would be criminal.”

Verse 8. A time to love,—hate,—of war,—of peace.]

“Love turns to hatred; interest or caprice
Dissolves the firmest knot by friendship tied.
O’er rival nations, with revenge inflamed,
Or lust of power, fell Discord shakes awhile
Her baleful torch: now smiling Peace returns.

9 <sup>i</sup> What profit hath he that worketh in that wherein he la-boureth ?

10 <sup>k</sup> I have seen the travail which God hath given to the sons of men to be exercised in it.

11 He hath made every thing beautiful in his time : also he hath set the world in their heart, so that <sup>l</sup> no man can find out the work that God maketh from the beginning to the end.

viii. 17 ; Rom. xi. 33.

The above paraphrase on the verses cited contains a general view of the principal occurrences of time, in reference to the human being, from his cradle to his grave, through all the operations of life.

Verse 9. What profit hath he] What real good, what solid pleasure, is derived from all the labours of man ! Necessity drives him to the principal part of his cares and toils ; he labours that he may eat and drink ; and he eats and drinks that he may be preserv*ed alive*, and kept from sickness and pain. Love of money, the basest of all passions, and restless ambition, drive men to many labours and expedients, which perplex and often destroy them. He, then, who lives without God, travails in pain all his days.

Verse 10. I have seen the travail] Man is a sinner ; and, because he is such, he suffers.

Verse 11. Beautiful in his time] God's works are well done ; there are order, harmony, and beauty in them all. Even the caterpillar is a finished beauty in all the changes through which it passes, when its structure is properly examined, and the end kept in view in which each change is to issue. Nothing of this kind can be said of the works of man. The most finished works of art are bungling jobs, when compared with the meanest operation of nature.

He hath set the world in their heart] העולם haolam, that hidden time—the period beyond the present,— ETERNITY. The proper translation of this clause is the following : " Also that eternity hath he placed in their heart, without which man could not find out the work which God hath made from the commencement to the end." God has deeply rooted the idea of eternity in every human heart ; and every considerate man sees, that all the operations of God refer to that endless duration. See ver. 14. And it is only in eternity that man will be able to discover what God has designed by the various works he has formed.

Verse 12. I know that there is no good in them, but, &c.] Since God has so disposed the affairs of this world, that the great events of providence cannot be accelerated or retarded by human cares and anxieties, submit to God ; make a proper use of what he has given : do thyself no harm, and endeavour as much as possible to do others good.

Enjoy, and bless thyself ; let others share
The transient blessing : 'tis the gift of God

12 <sup>m</sup> I know that there is no good in them, but for a man to rejoice, and to do good in his life.

13 And also <sup>n</sup> that every man should eat and drink, and enjoy the good of all his labour, it is the gift of God.

14 I know that whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever : <sup>o</sup> nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it : and God doeth

i. 9.

Verse 14. I know that whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever] לעולם leolam, for eternity ; in reference to that grand consummation of men and things intimated in ver. 11. God has produced no being that he intends ultimately to destroy. He made every thing in reference to eternity ; and, however matter may be changed and refined, animal and intellectual beings shall not be deprived of their existence. The brute creation shall be restored, and all human spirits shall live for ever ; the pure in a state of supreme and endless blessedness, the impure in a state of indestructible misery.

Nothing can be put to it] No new order of beings, whether animate or inanimate, can be produced. God will not create more ; man cannot add.

Nor any thing taken from it] Nothing can be annihilated ; no power but that which can create can destroy. And whatever he has done, he intended to be a means of impressing a just sense of his being, providence, mercy, and judgments, upon the souls of men. A proper consideration of God's works has a tendency to make man a religious creature ; that is, to impress his mind with a sense of the existence of the Supreme Being, and the reverence that is due to him. In this sense the fear of God is frequently taken in Scripture. The Hebrew of this clause is strongly emphatic : וְהָאֱלֹהִים יֵשֶׁה שִׁירָאוֹ כְּלָפְנוֹ ve- haelohim asah sheiyreuo millephanaiv ; " And the gods he hath done, that they might fear from before his faces." Even the doctrine of the eternal Trinity in Unity may be collected from numberless appearances in nature. A consideration of the herb trefoil is said to have been the means of fully convincing the learned Erasmus of the truth of the assertion, These Three are
One : and yet three distinct. He saw the same root, the same fibres, the same pulpy substance, the same membranous covering, the same colour, the same taste, the same smell, in every part ; and yet the three leaves distinct : but each and all a continuation of the stem, and proceeding from the same root. Such a fact as this may at least illustrate the doctrine. An intelligent shepherd, whom he met upon the mountains, is said to have exhibited the herb, and the illustration, while discoursing on certain difficulties in the Christian faith. When a child, I heard a learned man relate this fact.

governs the world now, as he has governed it from the beginning; and the revolutions and operations of nature are the same now, that they have been from the beginning. What we see now, is the same as has been seen by those before us.

And God requireth that which is past] i. e., That it may return again in its proper order. The heavens themselves, taking in their great revolutions, show the same phenomena. Even comets are supposed to have their revolutions, though some of them are hundreds of years in going round their orbits.

But in the economy of grace, does not God require that which is past? Whatever blessing or influence God gives to the soul of man, he intends shall remain and increase; and it will, if man be faithful. Reader, canst thou produce all the secret inspirations of his Spirit, all the drawings of his love, his pardoning mercy, his sanctifying grace, the heavenly-mindedness produced in thee, thy holy zeal, thy spirit of prayer, thy tender conscience, the witness of the Spirit, which thou didst once receive and enjoy? WHERE are they? God requireth that which is past.

Verse 16. The place of judgment, that wickedness was there] The abuse of power, and the perversion of judgment, have been justly complained of in every age of the world. The following paraphrase is good:—

“But what enjoyment can our labours yield,
When e’en the remedy prescribed by heaven
To cure disorders proves our deadliest bane?
When God’s vicegerents, destined to protect
The weak from insolence of power, to guard
Their lives and fortunes, impious robbers turn?
And, or by force or fraud, deprive of both?—
To what asylum shall the injured fly
From her tribunal, where perverted law
Acquits the guilty, the innocent condemns?”—C.

Verse 17. For there is a time there for every purpose] Man has his time here below, and God shall have his time above. At his throne the judged shall be rejudged, and iniquity for ever close her mouth.

Verse 18. That they might see that they themselves are beasts.] The author of Choholeth has given a correct view of this difficult verse, by a proper translation: “I said in my heart, reflecting on the state of the sons of men, O that God would enlighten them, and make them see that even they themselves are like beasts.” These words are to be referred to those in authority who abused their power; particularly to the corrupt magistrates mentioned above.

Verse 19. For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts] From the present comparison of great men to beasts, the author takes occasion to enforce the subject by mentioning the state of mankind in general, with respect to the mortality of their bodies; and then, by an easy transition, touches in the next verse on the point which is of such infinite consequence to religion.

As the one dieth, so dieth the other] Animal life is the same both in the man and in the beast.

They have all one breath] They respire in the same way; and when they cease to respire, animal life becomes extinct.

Befalleth beasts—This is wanting in six of Kennicott’s and De Rossi’s MSS.

Verse 20. All go unto one place]

“Man was born
To die, nor aught exceeds in this respect
The vilest brute. Both transient, frail, and vain,
Draw the same breath; alike grow old, decay,
And then expire: both to one grave descend;
There blended lie, to native dust return’d.”—C.

Verse 21. Who knoweth the spirit of man] I think the meaning of this important verse is well taken by the above able writer:—

The nobler part of man, ’tis true, survives
The frail corporeal frame: but who regards

The difference? Those who live like beasts, as such Would die, and be no more, if their own fate Depended on themselves. Who once reflects, Amidst his revels, that the human soul, Of origin celestial, mounts aloft, While that of brutes to earth shall downward go?"

The word רוּחַ ruach, which is used in this and the nineteenth verse, has two significations, breath and spirit. It signifies spirit, or an incorporeal substance, as distinguished from flesh, or a corporeal one, 1 Kings xxii. 21, 22, and Isa. xxxi. 3. And it signifies the spirit or soul of man, Psa. xxxi. 6, Isa. lvii. 16, and in this book, chap. xii. 7, and in many other places. In this book it is used also to signify the breath, spirit, or soul of a beast. While it was said in ver. 19, they have all one breath, i. e., the man and the beast live the same kind of animal life; in this verse, a proper distinction is made between the רוּחַ ruach, or soul of man, and the רוּחַ ruach, or soul of the beast: the one goeth upwards, the other goeth downwards. The literal translation of these important words is this: "Who considereth the (רוּחַ ruach) immortal spirit of the sons of Adam, which ascendeth? it is from above; (רוּחַ לְמַלְאָה hi lemalah;) and the spirit or breath of the cattle, which descendeth? it is downwards unto the earth," i. e., it tends to the earth only. This place gives no countenance to the materiality of the soul; and yet it is the strongest hold to which the cold and fruitless materialist can resort.

Solomon most evidently makes an essential difference between the human soul and that of brutes. Both have souls, but of different natures: the soul of man was made for God, and to God it shall return: God is its portion; and when a holy soul leaves the body, it goes to paradise. The soul of the beast was made to derive its happiness from this lower world. Brutes shall have a resurrection, and have an endless enjoyment in a new earth. The body of man shall arise, and join his soul that is already above; and both enjoy final blessedness in the fruition of God. That Solomon did not believe they had the same kind of spirit, and the same final lot, as some materialists and infidels say, is evident from chap. xii. 7: "The spirit shall return unto God who gave it."

Verse 22. A man should rejoice in his own works] Do not turn God's blessings into sin by perverseness and complaining; make the best of life. God will sweeten its bitters to you, if you be faithful. Remember this is the state to prepare for glory; and the evils of life may be so sanctified to you as to work for your good. Though even wretched without, you may be happy within; for God can make all grace to abound towards you. You may be happy if you please; cry to God, who never rejects the prayer of the humble, and gives his Holy Spirit to all them that ask him.

NOTES ON CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. Considered all the oppressions] שָׁקַף shakuf signifies any kind of injury which a man can receive in his person, his property, or his good fame.

On the side of their oppressors there was power] And, therefore, neither protection nor comfort for the oppressed.

Verse 2. Wherefore I praised the dead] I considered those happy who had escaped from the pilgrimage of life to the place where the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest.

Verse 3. Which hath not yet been] Better never

3 <sup>d</sup> Yea, better is he than both they, which hath not yet been, who hath not seen the evil work that is done under the sun.

4 Again, I considered all travail, and <sup>e</sup> every right work, that <sup>f</sup> for this a man is envied of his neighbour. This is also vanity and vexation of spirit.

5 The fool <sup>g</sup> foldeth his hands together, and eateth his own flesh.

to have been born into the world, than to have seen and suffered so many miseries.

Verse 4. For this a man is envied] It is not by injustice and wrong only that men suffer, but through envy also. For if a man act uprightly and properly in the world, he soon becomes the object of his neighbour's envy and calumny too. Therefore the encouragement to do good, to act an upright part, is very little. This constitutes a part of the vain and empty system of human life.

Verse 5. The fool foldeth his hands] After all, without labour and industry no man can get any com-

6 <sup>b</sup> Better is a handful with quietness, than both the hands full with travail and vexation of spirit.

7 Then I returned, and I saw vanity under the sun.

8 There is one alone, and there is not a second; yea, he hath neither child nor brother: yet is there no end of all his labour; neither is his <sup>i</sup> eye satisfied with riches; <sup>k</sup> neither saieth he, For whom do I labour, and bereave my soul of good? This is also vanity, yea, it is a sore travail.

9 Two are better than one; because they have a good reward for their labour.

10 For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow: but wo to him that is alone when he falleth; for he hath not another to help him up.

fort in life; and he who gives way to idleness is the veriest of fools.

Verse 6. Better is a handful with quietness] These may be the words of the slothful man, and spoken in vindication of his idleness; as if he had said, "Every man who labours and amasses property is the object of envy, and is marked by the oppressor as a subject for spoil; better, therefore, to act as I do; gain little, and have little, and enjoy my handful with quietness." Or the words may contain Solomon's reflection on the subject.

Verse 8. There is one alone, and there is not a second] Here covetousness and avarice are characterized. The man who is the centre of his own existence; has neither wife, child, nor legal heir; and yet is as intent on getting money as if he had the largest family to provide for; nor does he only labour with intense application, but he even refuses himself the comforts of life out of his own gains! This is not only vanity, the excess of foolishness, but it is also sore travail.

Verse 9. Two are better than one] Married life is infinitely to be preferred to this kind of life, for the very reasons alleged below, and which require no explanation.

Verse 13. Better is a poor and a wise child] The Targum applies this to Abraham. "Abraham was a poor child of only three years of age; but he had the spirit of prophecy, and he refused to worship the idols which the old foolish king—Nimrod—had set up; therefore Nimrod cast him into a furnace of fire. But the Lord worked a miracle and delivered him. Yet there was no knowledge in Nimrod, and he would not be admonished." The Targum proceeds:

Verse 14. For out of prison he cometh to reign] "Then Abraham left the country of the idolaters, where he had been imprisoned, and came and reigned

12 And if one prevail against him, two shall withstand him; and a threefold cord is not quickly broken.

13 Better is a poor and a wise child, than an old and foolish king, <sup>1</sup> who will no more be admonished.

14 For out of prison he cometh to reign; whereas also he that is born in his kingdom becometh poor.

15 I considered all the living which walk under the sun, with the <sup>m</sup> second child that shall stand up in his stead.

16 There is no end of all the people, even of all that have been before them: they also that come after shall not rejoice in him. Surely this also is <sup>n</sup> vanity and vexation of spirit.

over the land of Canaan; and Nimrod became poor in this world." This is the fact to which the ancient rabbins supposed Solomon to allude.

Verse 15. With the second child that shall stand up] The Targum applies this to the case of Jeroboam and Rehoboam. History affords many instances of mean persons raised to sovereign authority, and of kings being reduced to the meanest offices, and to a morsel of bread. Agrippa himself ascended the throne of Israel after having been long in prison. See Josephus, Ant. lib. xviii. c. 8. This the heathens attributed to Fortune.

Si fortuna volet, fies de rhetore consul;

Si volet hæc eadem, fies de consule rhetor

Juv. Sat. vii., ver. 197.

Though I have given what the Jews suppose to be the allusion in these verses, yet the reader may doubt whether the reference be correct. There is a case implied, whether from fact or assumption I cannot say; but it seems to be this:

A king who had abused the authority vested in him by oppressing the people, had a son whose prudent conduct promised much comfort to the nation, when he should come to the throne. The father, seeing the popular wish, and becoming jealous of his son, shut him up in prison. In the interim the old king either dies or is deposed, and the son is brought out of prison, and placed on the throne. Then (ver. 15, 16) multitudes of the people flock to him, and begin to walk under the sun; i. e., the prosperous state to which the nation is raised by its redemption from the former tyranny. However, the wise man insinuates that this sunshine will not last long. The young king, feeling the reins in his own hands, and being surrounded by those whose interest it was to flatter in order to obtain and continue in court favour, he also becomes corrupted, so that those who come after shall have no cause of rejoicing in him. This appears to be the case; and similar cases have frequently occurred, not only in Asiatic, but also in European history, I have, in another place, referred to the case of Rushn Achter, who was brought out of prison, and set upon the throne of Hindoostan. This is expressed in the following elegant Persian couplet, where his fortune is represented as similar to that of the patriarch Joseph :—

روشن اختر بود اکنون ماه شد
یوسف از زندن بر آمد شاه شد

“The bright star is now become a moon :

Joseph is taken out of prison, and become a king.”

Rushn Achter signifies a bright or splendid star.

Verse 16. There is no end of all the people] This is supposed to refer to the multitudes of people who hail the advent and accession of a new sovereign; for, as Suetonius remarks, A plerisque adorari solem orientem, “Most people adore the rising sun.” But when the new king becomes old, very few regard him; and perhaps he lives long enough to be as much despised by the very persons who before were ready to worship him. This is also a miserable vanity. Thus the blooming heir—

“Shall feel the sad reverse : honoured awhile ;

Then, like his sire, contemn'd, abhorr'd, forgot.”—C

NOTES ON CHAP. V.

Verse 1. Keep thy foot] This verse the Hebrew and all the versions join to the preceding chapter.

Solomon, having before intimated, though very briefly, that the only cure against human vanity is a due sense of religion, now enters more largely on this important subject, and gives some excellent directions with regard to the right performance of Divine service, the nature of vocal and mental prayer, the danger of rash vows, &c.—C.

The whole verse might be more literally translated thus :—

“Guard thy steps as thou art going to the house of God ; and approach to hearken, and not to give the sacrifice of fools, for none of them have knowledge about doing evil.” “They offer gifts for their sins, and do not turn from their evil works ; for they know not (they distinguish not) between good and evil.” See the Chaldee.

Verse 2. Be not rash with thy mouth] Do not hasten with thy mouth ; weigh thy words, feel deeply, think much, speak little.

Verse 3. For a dream cometh] That is, as dreams are generally the effect of the business in which we have been engaged during the day ; so a multitude of words evidence the feeble workings of the foolish heart.

Verse 4. When thou vowest a vow] When in distress and difficulty, men are apt to promise much to God if he will relieve them ; but generally forget the vow when the distress or trouble is gone by.

Verse 5. Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, &c.] We are under constant obligations to live to God ; no vow can make it more so. Yet, there may be cases in which we should bind ourselves to take up some particular cross, to perform some particular duty, to forego some particular attachment that does not tend to bring our souls nearer to God. Then, if fully determined, and strong in faith relative to the point, bind and hold fast ; but if not fully, rationally, and conscientiously determined, “do not suffer thy mouth to cause thy soul to sin.”

to sin; <sup>i</sup> neither say thou before the angel, that it was an error: wherefore should God be angry at thy voice, and destroy the work of thine hands?

7 For in the multitude of dreams and many words there are also divers vanities: but <sup>k</sup> fear thou God.

8 If thou <sup>l</sup> seest the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of judgment and justice in a province, marvel not <sup>m</sup> at the matter: for <sup>n</sup> he that is higher than the highest regardeth; and there be higher than they.

was an error] Nor think of saying “before the cruel angel, who shall exercise authority over thee in the judgment of the great day, that thou didst it through ignorance.”—Chaldec. I believe by the angel nothing else is intended than the priest, whose business it was to take cognizance of vows and offerings. See Lev. v. 4, 5. In Mal. ii. 7, the priest is called the “angel of the Lord of hosts.”

Verse 7. In—dreams—are—divers vanities; but fear thou God.] If, by the disturbed state of thy mind during the day, or by Satanic influence, thou dream of evil, do not give way to any unreasonable fears, or gloomy forebodings, of any coming mischief:—FEAR GOD. Fear neither the dream nor its interpretation; God will take care of and protect thee. Most certainly, he that fears God need fear nothing else. Well may an upright soul say to Satan himself, I fear God; and because I fear him, I do not fear thee.

Verse 8. If thou seest the oppression of the poor] For this was a frequent case under all governments; and especially in the provinces or colonies which being far from the seat of government, were generally oppressed by the sovereign’s deputies.

Marvel not at the matter] החפץ hachephets, the will, i. e., of God; which permits such evils to take place; for all things shall work together for good to them that love him.

“Marvel not,
Ye righteous, if his dispensations here
Unequal seem. What, though disorders reign?
He still presides, and with unerring hand Directs the vast machine. His wisdom can From discord harmony produce; and make Even vice itself subservient to his ends.”

Verse 9. The profit of the earth is for all] The earth, if properly cultivated, is capable of producing food for every living creature; and without cultivation none has a right to expect bread.

The king himself is served by the field.] Without the field he cannot have supplies for his own house; and, unless agriculture flourish, the necessary expenses of the state cannot be defrayed. Thus, God joins the head and feet together; for while the peasant is protected by the king as executor of the laws, the king himself is dependent on the peasant; as the wealth of the nation is the fruit of the labourers’ toil.

Verse 10. He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver] The more he gets, the more he would get; for the saying is true:—

Crescit amor nummi, quantum ipsa pecunia crescit.

“The love of money increases, in proportion as money itself increases.”

Verse 11. When goods increase] An increase of property always brings an increase of expense, by a multitude of servants; and the owner really possesses no more, and probably enjoys much less, than he did, when every day provided its own bread, and could lay up no store for the next. But if he have more enjoyment, his cares are multiplied; and he has no kind of profit. “This also is vanity.”

Verse 12. The sleep of a labouring man is sweet] His labour is healthy exercise. He is without possessions, and without cares; his sleep, being undisturbed, is sound and refreshing.

Verse 13. Riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt.] This may be the case through various causes: 1. He may make an improper use of them, and lose his health by them. 2. He may join in an unfortunate partnership and lose all. 3. His riches may excite the desire of the robber; and he may spoil him of his goods, and even take away his life. 4. Or, he may leave them to his son, who turns profligate, spends the whole, and ruins both his body and soul. I have seen this again and again.

Verse 14. And he begetteth a son, and there is nothing in his hand.] He has been stripped of his property by unfortunate trade or by plunderers; and he has nothing to leave to his children.

Verse 15. As he came forth] However it may be, he himself shall carry nothing with him into the eter-

Verse 17. All his days also he eateth in darkness] Even his enjoyments are embittered by uncertainty. He fears for his goods; the possibility of being deprived of them fills his heart with anguish. But instead of יָאָכֵל yochel, "he shall eat," יָלֵךְ yelech, "he shall walk," is the reading of several MSS. He walks in darkness—he has no evidence of salvation. There is no ray of light from God to penetrate the gloom; and all beyond life is darkness impenetrable!

Verse 18. Behold that which I have seen] This is the result of my observations and experience. God gives every man, in the course of his providence, the necessities of life; and it is his will that he should thankfully use them.

For it is his portion.] What is requisite for him in the lower world; without them his life cannot subsist; and earthly blessings are as truly the portion of his body and animal life, as the salvation of God is the portion of his soul.

Verse 20. For he shall not much remember] The person who acts in this way, extracts all the good requisite from life. He passes through things temporal so as not to lose those that are eternal:—

"Calm and serene, the road of life to him,
Or long or short, rugged or smooth, with thorns
O'erspread, or gay with flowers, is but a road.
Such fare as offers grateful he accepts,
And smiling to his native home proceeds." C

NOTES ON CHAP. VI.

Verse 2. A man to whom God hath given riches] A man may possess much earthly goods, and yet enjoy nothing of them. Possession and fruition are not necessarily joined together; and this is also among the vanities of life. It is worthy of remark, that it belongs to God as much to give the power to enjoy as it does to give the earthly blessings. A wise heathen saw this:—

Di tibi divitias dederant, artemque fruendi.

Hor. Ep. lib. i., ep. 4, ver. 7.

3 If a man beget a hundred children, and live many years, so that the days of his years be many, and his soul be not filled with good, and <sup>d</sup> also that he have no burial; I say, that <sup>e</sup> an untimely birth is better than he.

4 For he cometh in with vanity, and departeth in darkness, and his name shall be covered with darkness.

5 Moreover he hath not seen the sun, nor known any thing : this hath more rest than the other.

6 Yea, though he live a thousand years twice told, yet hath he seen no good : do not all go to one place ?

7 <sup>f</sup> All the labour of man is for his mouth, and yet the <sup>g</sup> appetite is not filled.

Verse 3. If a man beget a hundred children] If he have the most numerous family and the largest possessions, and is so much attached to his riches that he grudges himself a monument ; an abortion in the eye of reason is to be preferred to such a man ; himself is contemptible, and his life worthless. The abortion comes in with vanity—balks expectation, departs in darkness—never opened its eyes upon the light, and its name is covered with darkness—it has no place in the family register, or in the chronicles of Israel. This, that hath neither seen the sun, nor known any thing, is preferable to the miser who has his coffers and granaries well furnished, should he have lived a thousand years, and had a hundred children. He has seen—possessed, no good ; and he and the abortion go to one place, equally unknown, and wholly forgotten.

Verse 7. All the labour of man] This is the grand primary object of all human labour ; merely to provide for the support of life by procuring things necessary. And life only exists for the sake of the soul ; because man puts these things in place of spiritual good, the appetite—the intense desire after the supreme good—is not satisfied. When man learns to provide as distinctly for his soul as he does for his body, then he will begin to be happy, and may soon attain his end.

Verse 8. For what hath the wise more than the fool ?] They must both labour for the same end. Both depend upon the labour of themselves or others for the necessities of life. Both must eat and drink in order to live ; and the rich man can no more eat two meals at a time, than he can comfortably wear two changes of raiment. The necessities of life are the same to both, and their condition in life is nearly similar ; liable to the same diseases, dissolution, and death.

Verse 9. Better is the sight of the eyes than the wandering of the desire] This is translated by the Vulgate, as a sort of adage : Melius est videre quod

8 For what hath the wise more than the fool ? what hath the poor, that knoweth to walk before the living ?

9 Better is the sight of the eyes <sup>h</sup> than the wandering of the desire : this is also vanity and vexation of spirit.

10 That which hath been is named already, and it is known that it is man : <sup>i</sup> neither may he contend with him that is mightier than he.

11 Seeing there be many things that increase vanity, what is man the better ?

12 For who knoweth what is good for man in this life, <sup>k</sup> all the days of his vain life which he spendeth as <sup>l</sup> a shadow ? for <sup>m</sup> who can tell a man what shall be after him under the sun ?

cupias, quam desiderare quod nescias ; “ It is better to see what one desires than to covet what one knows not.” It is better to enjoy the present than to feed one’s self with vain desires of the future. What we translate the wandering of desire, מהלך נפש mehaloch nephesh, is the travelling of the soul. What is this ? Does it simply mean desire ? Or is there any reference here to the state of separate spirits ? It however shows the soul to be in a restless state, and consequently to be unhappy. If Christ dwell in the heart by faith, the soul is then at rest, and this is properly the rest of the people of God.

Verse 10. That which hath been is named already] The Hebrew of this verse might be translated, “ Who is he who is ? His name has been already called. And it is known that he is Adam ; and that he cannot contend in judgment with him who is stronger than he.”

“ What is more excellent than man ; yet can he not, in the lawe, get the victory of him that is mightier than he.”—COVERDALE.

ADAM is his name ; and it at once points out, 1. His dignity ; he was made in the image of God. 2. His fall ; he sinned against his Maker, and was cast out of Paradise. And 3. His recovery by Christ ; the second man (Adam) was the Lord from heaven, and a quickening Spirit.

Verse 12. For who knoweth what is good for man in this life] Those things which we deem good are often evil. And those which we think evil are often good. So ignorant are we, that we run the greatest hazard in making a choice. It is better to leave ourselves and our concerns in the hands of the Lord, than to keep them in our own.

For who can tell a man what shall be after him] Futurity is with God. While he lives, man wishes to know what is before him. When he is about to die, he wishes to know what will be after him. All this is vanity ; God, because he is merciful, wil’ reveal neither.

NOTES ON CHAP. VII.

Verse 1. A good name] Unsatisfactory as all sub-lunary things are, yet still there are some which are of great consequence, and among them a good name. The place is well paraphrased in the following verses:

“A spotless name,

*By virtuous deeds acquired, is sweeter far
Than fragrant balms, whose odours round diffused Regale the invited guests. Well may such men Rejoice at death's approach, and bless the hours
That end their toilsome pilgrimage; assured
That till the race of life is finish'd none
Can be completely blest.”*

Verse 2. It is better to go to the house of mourning] Birthdays were generally kept with great festivity, and to these the wise man most probably refers; but according to his maxim, the miseries of life were so many and so oppressive that the day of a man's death was to be preferred to the day of his birth. But, independently of the allusion, it is much more profitable to visit the house of mourning for the dead than the house of festivity. In the former we find occasion for serious and deeply edifying thoughts and reflections; from the latter we seldom return with one profitable thought or one solid impression.

Verse 3. Sorrow is better than laughter] The reason is immediately given; for by the sorrow of the countenance—the grief of heart that shows itself in the countenance—

The heart is made better.] In such cases, most men try themselves at the tribunal of their own consciences, and resolve on amendment of life.

Verse 4. The heart of the wise is in the house of mourning] A wise man loves those occasions from which he can derive spiritual advantage; and therefore prefers visiting the sick, and sympathizing with those mourning; but the heart of fools is in the house of mirth.

5 <sup>e</sup> It is better to hear the rebuke of the wise, than for a man to hear the song of fools.

6 <sup>f</sup> For as the <sup>g</sup> crackling of thorns under a pot, so is the laughter of the fool: this also is vanity.

7 Surely oppression maketh a wise man mad; <sup>h</sup> and a gift destroyeth the heart.

8 Better is the end of a thing than the beginning thereof: and <sup>i</sup> the patient in spirit is who have suffered privations by death. But the fool—the gay, thoughtless, and giddy—prefers places and times of diversion and amusement. Here he is prevented from seriously considering either himself or his latter end. The grand fault and misfortune of youth.

Verse 6. For as the crackling of thorns] They make a great noise, a great blaze; and are extinguished in a few moments. Such, indeed, comparatively, are the joys of life: they are noisy, flashy, and transitory.

Verse 7. Oppression maketh a wise man mad] This has been translated with good show of reason, “Surely oppression shall give lustre to a wise man: but a gift corrupteth the heart.” The chief difference here is in the word יהוהל yeholel, which, from the root הלל halal, signifies to glister, irradiate, as well as to move briskly, to be mad, furious, in a rage; and certainly the former meaning suits this place best. We cannot think that the wise man—he that is truly religious, (for this is its meaning in the language of Solomon,) can be made mad by any kind of oppression; but as he trusts in God, so in patience he possesses his soul.

Verse 8. Better is the end] We can then judge of the whole, and especially if the matter relate to the conduct of Divine Providence. At the beginning we are often apt to make very rash conjectures, and often suppose that such and such things are against us; and that every thing is going wrong. Dr. Byrom gives good advice on such a subject:—

“With patient mind thy course of duty run:

God nothing does, nor suffers to be done,

But thou wouldst do thyself, couldst thou but see

The end of all events, as well as HE.”

I may add, in the words of our paraphrast,—

“Wait the result, nor ask with frantic rage

Why God permits such things. His ways, though now better than the <sup>k</sup> proud in spirit.

9 <sup>1</sup> Be not hasty in thy spirit to be angry : for anger resteth in the bosom of fools.

10 Say not thou, What is the cause that the former days were better than these ? for thou dost not inquire <sup>m</sup> wisely concerning this.

11 Wisdom <sup>n</sup> is good with an inheritance : and by it there is profit <sup>o</sup> to them that see the sun.

12 For wisdom is a <sup>p</sup> defence, and money is a defence : but the excellency of knowledge

Involved in clouds and darkness, will appear All right, when from thine eyes the mist is clear'd. Till then, to learn submission to his will More wisdom shows, than vainly thus to attempt Exploring what thou canst not comprehend, And God for wisest ends thinks fit to hide.”—C.

Verse 9. Anger resteth in the bosom of fools.] A wise man, off his guard, may feel it for a moment : but in him it cannot rest : it is a fire which he immediately casts out of his breast. But the fool—the man who is under the dominion of his own tempers, harbours and fosters it, till it takes the form of malice, and then excites him to seek full revenge on those whom he deems enemies. Hence that class of dangerous and empty fools called duellists.

Verse 10. The former days were better than these ?] This is a common saying ; and it is as foolish as it is common. There is no weight nor truth in it ; but men use it to excuse their crimes, and the folly of their conduct. “In former times, say they, men might be more religious, use more self-denial, be more exemplary.” This is all false. In former days men were wicked as they are now, and religion was unfashionable : God also is the same now as he was then ; as just, as merciful, as ready to help : and there is no depravity in the age that will excuse your crimes, your follies, and your carelessness.

Among the oriental proverbs I find the following :

“Many say, This is a corrupt age. This mode of speaking is not just ; it is not the age that is corrupt, but the men of the age.”

Verse 11. Wisdom is good with an inheritance] In this chapter Solomon introduces many observations which appear to be made by objectors against his doctrine ; and as he was satisfied of their futility, he proposes them in their own full strength, and then combats and destroys them. It is quite necessary to attend to this ; else we shall take the objector's words for those of Solomon ; and think, as some have done, that the wise man contradicts and refutes himself. Observations, reflections, and objections of friends and adversaries are frequently introduced in the works of ancient authors, without mentioning them as such. This is frequent, more particularly in ethic writers ; is, that wisdom giveth life to them that have it.

13 Consider the work of God : for <sup>a</sup> who can make that straight, which he hath made crooked ?

14 <sup>r</sup> In the day of prosperity be joyful, but in the day of adversity consider : God also hath <sup>s</sup> set the one over against the other, to the end that man should find nothing after him.

15 All things have I seen in the days of my vanity : <sup>t</sup> there is a just man that perisheth in his righteousness, and there is a wicked and we have many specimens in Horace ; and without this distinction, it would be impossible to make sense of some of his writings. Here, an objector, who had listened to the wise man declaiming in favour of wisdom, suddenly interrupts him, and says in effect, “I grant the truth of what you have said. Wisdom is very good in its place ; but what is it without property ? A man who has a good inheritance may be profited by wisdom, because it will show him how to manage it to the best advantage.”

Verse 12. Wisdom is a defence] To whom Solomon answers : All true wisdom is most undoubtedly a great advantage to men in all circumstances ; and money is also of great use : but it cannot be compared to wisdom. Knowledge of Divine and human things is a great blessing. Money is the means of supporting our animal life : but wisdom—the religion of the true God—gives life to them that have it. Money cannot procure the favour of God, nor give life to the soul.

Verse 13. Consider the work of God] Such is the nature of his providence, that it puts money into the hands of few : but wisdom is within the reach of all. The first is not necessary to happiness ; therefore, it is not offered to men ; the latter is ; and therefore God, in his goodness, offers it to the whole human race. The former can rarely be acquired, for God puts it out of the reach of most men, and you cannot make that straight which he has made crooked ; the latter may be easily attained by every person who carefully and seriously seeks it from God.

Verse 14. In the day of prosperity be joyful] When ye receive these temporal gifts from God, enjoy them, and be thankful to the Giver : but remember, this sunshine will not always last. God has balanced prosperity and adversity against each other ; and were it not so, how many would put the former in the place of God himself !

Verse 15. There is a just man that perisheth] This is another objection ; as if he had said, “I also have had considerable experience ; and I have not discovered any marked approbation of the conduct of the righteous, or disapprobation of that of the wicked. On the contrary, I have seen a righteous man perish, man that prolongeth his life in his wickedness.

18 It is good that thou shouldest take hold of this ; yea, also from this withdraw not thine hand : for he that feareth God shall come forth of them all.

while employed in the work of righteousness ; and a wicked man prosperous, and even exalted, while living wickedly. The former is indeed a victim to his righteousness, while the life and prosperity of the latter were preserved : hence I conclude, it is not prudent, whatever good there may be in religion, and whatever excellence in wisdom, that men should be overmuch righteous, or over-wise : for why should they by austerity and hard study destroy themselves ?" So far the objector.

Verse 16. Why shouldest thou destroy thyself ?] תִּשְׁשׁוּמֵן tishshomen, make thyself desolate, so that thou shalt be obliged to stand alone ; neither make thyself over-wise, תִּתְחַצֵּק tithchaccam, do not pretend to abundance of wisdom. Why shouldest thou be so singular ? In other words, and in modern language, "There is no need of all this watching, fasting, praying, self-denial, &c., you carry things to extremes. Why should you wish to be reputed singular and precise ?" To this the man of God answers :

Verse 17. Be not overmuch wicked, neither be thou foolish : why shouldest thou die before thy time ?] אַל תִּרְשַׁע הַרְבֵּה al tirsha harbeh. Do not multiply wickedness ; do not add direct opposition to godliness to the rest of your crimes. Why should you provoke God to destroy you before your time ? Perdition will come soon enough. If you will not turn from your sins, and avoid it finally, yet keep out of it as long as you can.

It cannot be supposed, except by those who are totally unacquainted with the nature of true religion, that a man may have too much holiness, too much of the life of God in his soul ! And yet a learned doctor, in three sermons on this text, has endeavoured to show, out-doing Solomon's infidel, "the sin, folly, and danger of being righteous overmuch." O rare darkness !

Verse 18. It is good that thou shouldest take hold of this] Do not let such an observation slip : take hold of this ; do not forget that. Get what you can in an honest way ; but do not forget to get true religion ; for he that fears God will be saved from all evil.

wise, thoroughly learned, and scientific man, may be of more use in fortifying and defending a city, than ten princes. Witness the case of Syracuse, when attacked by the Romans both by sea and land. Archimedes, by his engines, burnt and dashed their fleet to pieces, and destroyed all that came near the walls. And had not the city been betrayed, and he killed, all their force and skill could not have taken it.

Verse 20. There is not a just man upon earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not.] יָחַס לֹא יֵחַת yechta, that may not sin. There is not a man upon earth, however just he may be, and habituated to do good, but is peccable—liable to commit sin ; and therefore should continually watch and pray, and depend upon the Lord. But the text does not say, the just man does commit sin, but simply that he may sin ; and so our translators have rendered it in 1 Sam. ii. 25, twice in 1 Kings viii. 31, 46, and 2 Chron. vi. 36 ; and the reader is requested to consult the note on 1 Kings viii. 46, where the proper construction of this word may be found, and the doctrine in question is fully considered.

Verse 21. Also take no heed unto all words that are spoken] This is good advice, and much for every man's peace through life.

Thy servant curse thee] מְקַלְלֶךָ mekallelecha, make light of thee, speak evil of thee.

Verse 22. Thou thyself—hast cursed others.] קָלַלְתָּ kalalta, thou hast spoken evil ; hast vilified others. O, who is free from evil speaking ; from uncharitable speaking ; from detailing their neighbour's faults, from whispering, talebearing, and backbiting ! Do not wonder if God, in his justice, permit thee to be calumniated, seeing thou hast so frequently calumniated others. See my discourse on Psal. xv. 1–5.

Verse 23. All this have I proved by wisdom] These rules I have laid down for my own conduct, and sought after more wisdom ; but have fallen far short of what I wished to be.

Verse 24. That which is far off] Though the wisdom that is essential to our salvation may be soon learned, through the teaching of the Spirit of wisdom, yet in wisdom itself there are extents and depths which none can reach or fathom.

Verse 25. I applied mine heart] I cast about, סבּוּת sabbothi, I made a circuit; I circumscribed the ground I was to traverse; and all within my circle I was determined to know, and to investigate, and to seek out wisdom, and the reason of things. Has man reason and understanding? If so, then this is his work. God as much calls him to use these powers in this way, as to believe on the Lord Jesus that he may be saved; and he that does not, according to the means in his power, is a slothful servant, from whom God may justly take away the misemployed or not used talent, and punish him for his neglect. Every doctrine of God is a subject both for reason and faith to work on.

To know the wickedness of folly, even of foolishness and madness.]

“And my own heart, with scrutiny severe,
By far the harder task survey’d; intent
To trace that wisdom which from heaven descends,
Fountain of living waters, and to explore
The source of human folly, whose foul streams Intoxicate and kill.”—C.

Verse 26. And I find more bitter than death the woman] After all his investigation of the wickedness of folly, and the foolishness of madness, he found nothing equally dangerous and ruinous with the blandishments of cunning women. When once the affections are entangled, escape without ruin is almost impossible.

Whoso pleaseth God] The man who walks with God, and he alone, shall escape this sore evil: and even he that fears God, if he get with an artful woman, may be soon robbed of his strength, and become like other men. A bad or artful woman is represented as a company of hunters, with nets, gins, &c., to catch their prey.

Verse 27. Counting one by one] I have gone over every particular. I have compared one thing with another; man with woman, his wisdom with her wiles; his strength with her blandishments; his influence with her ascendancy; his powers of reason with her arts and cunning: and in a thousand men, I have found one thoroughly upright man; but among one thousand women I have not found one such. This is a lamentable account of the state of morals in Judea, in the days of the wise King Solomon. Thank God! it would not be difficult to get a tithe of both in the same number in the present day.

The Targum gives this a curious turn:—“There is another thing which my soul has sought, but could not find: a man perfect and innocent, and without corruption, from the days of Adam until Abraham the just was born; who was found faithful and upright among the thousand kings who came together to construct the tower of Babel: but a woman like to Sarah among the wives of all those kings I have not found.”

Verse 29. Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright] Whatever evil may be now found among men and women, it is not of God; for God made them all upright. This is a singular verse, and has been most variously translated: עשה האלהים את האדם ישר והמה נקשו חשבנות רבים asah haelohim eth haadam yashar vehemhah bikkeshu chishbonoth rabbim.

“Elohim has made mankind upright, and they have sought many computations.”

“He hath meddled with endless questions.”—VULGATE.

“Many reasonings.”—SEPTUAGINT, SYRIAC, and ARABIC.

“They seek dyverse sotylties.”—COVERDALE.
And he himself mangleth with questions without end.
—Old MS. Bible.

The Targum considers the text as speaking of Adam and Eve.

“This have I found out, that the Lord made the first man upright before him, and innocent: but the serpent and Eve seduced him to eat of the fruit of the tree, which gave the power to those who ate of it to discern between good and evil; and was the cause that death came upon him, and all the inhabitants of the earth; and they sought that they might find out many stratagems to bring this evil upon all the inhabitants of the world.”

I doubt much whether the word חשבנות chishbonoth should be taken in a bad sense. It may signify the whole of human devices, imaginations, inventions, artifices, with all their products; arts, sciences, schemes, plans, and all that they have found out for the destruction or melioration of life. God has given marvellous faculties; and of them he has made strange uses, and sovereign abuses: and they have been, in consequence, at one time his help, and at another his bane. This is the fair way of understanding this question.

NOTES ON CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. Who knoweth the interpretation] פֶּשֶׁר peshér, a pure Chaldee word, found nowhere else in the Bible but in the Chaldee parts of Daniel. "A man's wisdom maketh his face to shine." Every state of the heart shines through the countenance; but there is such an evidence of the contented, happy, pure, benevolent state of the soul in the face of a truly pious man, that it must be observed, and cannot be mistaken. In the Hebrew the former clause of this verse ends the preceding chapter. Who has ever been deceived in the appearance of the face that belonged to a savage heart? Those who represent, by painting, or otherwise, a wise man, with a gravely sour face, striking awe and forbidding approach, have either mistaken the man, or are unacquainted with some essential principles of their art.

The boldness of his face shall be changed.] Instead of יִשְׁחַן yeshunne, which signifies shall be hated, many of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. have יִשְׁחַן yeshunnch, shall be changed or doubled. Hence the verse might be read, "The wisdom of a man shall illuminate his face; and the strength of his countenance shall be doubled." He shall speak with full confidence and conviction on a subject which he perfectly understands, and all will feel the weight of his observations.

Verse 2. To keep the king's commandment] This sentence would be better translated, I keep the mouth of the king; I take good heed not to meddle with state secrets; and if I know, to hide them. Or, I am obedient to the commands of the laws; I feel myself bound by whatever the king has decreed.

In regard of the oath of God.] You have sworn obedience to him; keep your oath, for the engagement was made in the presence of God. It appears that the Jewish princes and chiefs took an oath of fidelity to their kings. This appears to have been done to David, 2 Sam. v. 1-3; to Joash, 2 Kings xi. 17; and to Solomon, 1 Chron. xxix. 24.

stand not in an evil thing; for he doeth whatsoever pleaseth him.

4 Where the word of a king is, there is power: and <sup>f</sup> who may say unto him, What doest thou?

5 Whoso keepeth the commandment <sup>g</sup> shall feel no evil thing: and a wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment.

Verse 3. Be not hasty] I consider the first five verses here as directions to courtiers, and the more immediate servants of kings.

Be steadily faithful to your sovereign. Do not stand in an evil thing. If you have done wrong, do not endeavour to vindicate yourself before him; it is of no use; his power is absolute, and he will do what he pleases. He will take his own view of the subject, and he will retain it. The language of a despotic sovereign was ever this, Sic volo, sic jubeo, stat pro ratione voluntas; "I will this. I command that. No hesitation! My will is law!" Therefore it is added here, Where the word of a king is, there is power—influence, authority, and the sword. And who may say unto him, whether he acts right or wrong, What doest thou? ver. 4. No wonder in such governments there are so many revolutions; but they are revolutions without amendment, as it is one tyrant rising up to destroy another, who, when seated in authority, acts in the way of his predecessor; till another, like himself, do to him as he has done to the former. In our country, after a long trial, we find that a mixed monarchy is the safest, best, and most useful form of government: we have had, it is true, unprincipled ministers, who wished to turn our limited into an absolute monarchy; and they were always ready to state that an absolute monarchy was best. Granted; provided the monarch be as wise, as holy, and as powerful as God!

Verse 5. Both time and judgment.] It is a matter of great importance to be able to discern when and now both to speak and act; but when time and manner are both determined, the matter comes next. What shall I speak? What shall I do? When, how, and what, answer to time, manner, and matter. To discern all these, and act suitably, is a lesson for a philosopher, and a study for a Christian.

Verse 6. To every purpose there is time] חֶפְזֵי chophets, every volition, every thing that depends on the will of man. He has generally the opportunity to and judgment, therefore the misery of man is great upon him.

7 <sup>i</sup> For he knoweth not that which shall be: for who can tell him <sup>k</sup> when it shall be?

8 <sup>l</sup> There is no man that hath power <sup>m</sup> over the spirit to retain the spirit; neither hath he power in the day of death: and there is no <sup>n</sup> discharge in that war; neither shall wickedness deliver those that are given to it.

9 All this have I seen, and applied my heart unto every work that is done under the sun: there is a time wherein one man ruleth over another to his own hurt.

10 And so I saw the wicked buried, who had come and gone from the place of the holy, and they were forgotten in the city where they had so done: this is also vanity.

do whatever he purposes; and as his purposes are frequently evil, his acts are so too; and in consequence his misery is great.

Verse 8. There is no man that hath power over the spirit to retain the spirit] The Chaldee has, "There is no man who can rule over the spirit of the breath, so as to prevent the animal life from leaving the body of man." Others translate to this sense: "No man hath power over the wind to restrain the wind; and none has power over death to restrain him; and when a man engages as a soldier, he cannot be discharged from the war till it is ended; and by wickedness no man shall be delivered from any evil." Taking it in this way, these are maxims which contain self-evident truths. Others suppose the verse to refer to the king who tyrannizes over and oppresses his people. He shall also account to God for his actions; he shall die, and he cannot prevent it; and when he is judged, his wickedness cannot deliver him.

Verse 9. One man ruleth over another to his own hurt.] This may be spoken of rulers generally, who, instead of feeding, fleece the flock; tyrants and oppressors, who come to an untimely end by their mismanagement of the offices of the state. All these things relate to Asiatic despots, and have ever been more applicable to them than to any other sovereigns in the world. They were despotic; they still are so.

Verse 10. Who had come and gone from the place of the holy] The place of the holy is the sacred office which they held, anointed either as kings or priests to God; and, not having fulfilled the holy office in a holy way, have been carried to their graves without lamentation, and lie among the dead without remembrance.

Verse 11. Because sentence] פתגם pitgam, a Divine decree or declaration. This is no Hebrew, but a mere Chaldee word, and occurs only in the later 13 But it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days, which are as a shadow; because he feareth not before God.

14 There is a vanity which is done upon the earth; that there be just men, unto whom it <sup>r</sup> happeneth according to the work of the wicked; again, there be wicked men, to whom it happeneth according to the work of the righteous: I said that this also is vanity.

books of the Bible—Esther, Ezra, and Daniel, and nowhere else but in this place. Because God does not immediately punish every delinquency, men think he disregards evil acts; and therefore they are emboldened to sin on. So this longsuffering of God, which leadeth to repentance, is abused so as to lead to farther crimes! When men sin against the remedy of their salvation, how can they escape perdition!

Verse 12. Though a sinner do evil a hundred times] If God bear so long with a transgressor, waiting in his longsuffering for him to repent and turn to him, surely he will be peculiarly kind to them that fear him, and endeavour to walk uprightly before him.

Verse 13. But it shall not be well with the wicked] Let not the long-spared sinner presume that, because sentence is not speedily executed on his evil works, and he is suffered to go on to his hundredth transgression, God has forgotten to punish. No; he feareth not before God; and therefore he shall not ultimately escape.

Verse 14. There be just men] See on chap. vii. ver. 16.

Verse 15. Then I commended mirth] These are some more of the cavils of the infidel objector: "Since virtue is frequently under oppression, and vice triumphs in health, and rolls in wealth, I see plainly that we should not trouble ourselves about future things; and therefore should be governed by the maxim, EDE, BIBE, LUDE. Post mortem nulla voluptas."

NOTES ON CHAP. IX.

Verse 1. The righteous, and the wise, and their works, are in the hand of God] This is a continuation of the preceding subject ; and here the wise man draws a conclusion from what he had seen, and from the well-known character of God, that the righteous, the wise, and their conduct, were all in the hand of God, protected by his power, and safe in his approbation : but we cannot judge from the occurrences which take place in life who are the objects of God's love or displeasure.

Verse 2. All things come alike to all] This is very generally true ; but God often makes a difference ; and his faithful followers witness many interventions of Divine Providence in their behalf. But there are general blessings, and general natural evils, that equally affect the just and the unjust. But in this all is right ; the evils that are in nature are the effects of the FALL clean ; to him that sacrificeth, and to him that sacrificeth not : as is the good, so is the sinner ; and he that sweareth, as he that feareth an oath.

of man ; and God will not suspend general laws, or alter them, to favour individual cases. Nor does he design that his approbation or disapprobation shall be shown by any of these occurrences. Every holy man has a testimony of God's approbation in his own heart ; and this makes him truly happy, let outward things be as they may. And, in general, what the wicked suffer is the fruit of their own doings. But the general state of nature as to what are called natural evils, is just as it ought to be. There is evil enough to show that man has fallen from God, and good enough to show that God deals with him in mercy. I cannot see that there is any rational cause for me to stumble at the dispensations of Divine Providence on these accounts.

Verse 3. The heart of the sons of men is full of evil] No wonder then that the curse of God should be frequent in the earth.

they live, and after that they go to the dead.

4 For to him that is joined to all the living there is hope: for a living dog is better than a dead lion.

5 For the living know that they shall die:
but <sup>d</sup> the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward; for <sup>e</sup> the memory of them is forgotten.

6 Also their love and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun.

14.—<sup>f</sup> Chap. viii. 15.

Verse 4. For to him that is joined to all the living there is hope] While a man lives he hopes to amend, and he hopes to have a better lot; and thus life is spent, hoping to grow better, and hoping to get more. The Vulgate has, "There is none that shall live always, nor has any hope of such a thing." Perhaps the best translation is the following: "What, therefore, is to be chosen? In him that is living there is hope." Then choose that eternal life which thou hopest to possess.

A living dog is better than a dead lion.] I suppose this was a proverb. The smallest measure of animal existence is better than the largest of dead matter. The poorest living peasant is infinitely above Alexander the Great.

Verse 5. The living know that they shall die] This is so self-evident that none can doubt it; and therefore all that have this conviction should prepare for death and eternal blessedness.

But the dead know not any thing] Cut off from life, they know nothing of what passes under the sun. Their day of probation is ended, and therefore they can have no farther reward in living a holy life; nor can they be liable to any farther punishment for crimes in a state of probation, that being ended.

Verse 6. Also their love, and their hatred] It is evident that he speaks here of the ignorance, want of power, &c., of the dead, in reference only to this life. And though they have no more a portion under the sun, yet he does not intimate that they have none anywhere else. A man threatens to conquer kingdoms, &c. He dies; what are his threats?

Verse 7. Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy] Do not vex and perplex yourselves with the dispensations and mysteries of Providence; enjoy the blessings which God has given you, and live to his glory; and then God will accept your works.

Verse 8. Let thy garments be always white] The Jews wore white garments on festal occasions, as emblems of joy and innocence. Be always pure, and always happy. The inhabitants of India are all dressed in clean white cotton, and to this is the allusion in the text.

The Targum says: "At all times let thy garments be washed and pure from the stain of sin. Acquire a good name, which is likened to the oil of anointing, that blessings may be called down upon thy head, and goodness not forsake thee."

Verse 9. Live joyfully with the wife whom thou lovest] Marry prudently, keep faithfully attached to the wife thou hast chosen, and rejoice in the labour of thy hands.

Some understand this as the words of the libertine objector: "Live joyfully with the woman whom thou lovest best." But this does not comport so well with the scope of the place.

Verse 10. Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do] Examine here the WHAT, the HOW, and the WHY.

I. What is necessary to be done in this life, in reference to another? 1. Turn from sin. 2. Repent. 3. Frequent the ordinances of God, and associate with the upright. 4. Read the Scriptures. 5. Pray for pardon. 6. Believe on the Lord Jesus, that thou mayest obtain it. 7. Look for the gift of the Holy Spirit. 8. Bring forth in their seasons the fruits of it—(1) Repentance; (2) Faith; and (3) The Holy Spirit. 9. Live to get good. 10. And to do good. 11. And refer every purpose and act to the eternal world.

II. How should these be done? With thy might.

1. Be fully convinced of the necessity of these things. 2. Be determined to act according to this conviction. 3. Then act with all thy strength; put forth all thy power in avoiding evil, repenting of sin, &c., &c.

III. Why should this be done? 1. Because thou art a dying man. 2. Thou art going into the grave. 3. When thou leavest this life, thy state of probation, with all its advantages, is eternally ended. 4. If thou die in sin, where God is thou shalt never come. For, 1. There is no work by which thou mayest profit; 2. No device by which thou mayest escape punishment; 3. No knowledge of any means of help; and, 4. No wisdom—restoration of the soul to the favour and image of God, in that grave whither thou goest. Therefore, work while it is called to-day.

My old MS. Bible translates this nervously: ~~Whatever thinge may thin hond don, besly wrech: for~~ ~~nouthr were, ne resoun, ne wfsdom, ne keennng~~ ~~schult be a wents hell, whither thou gost. Properly~~ speaking, every sinner is going to hell, and the wisdom of God calls upon him to turn and live.

it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.

11 I returned, <sup>i</sup> and saw under the sun, that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favour to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all.

12 For <sup>k</sup> man also knoweth not his time: as

Verse 11. The race is not to the swift] It is not by swiftness, nor by strength and valour, that races are gained and battles won. God causes the lame often to take the prey, the prize; and so works that the weak overthrow the strong; therefore, no man should confide in himself. All things are under the government, and at the disposal of God.

But time and chance] עת eth, time or opportunity, פגע pega, incident or occurrence,—

Happeneth to them all.] Every man has what may be called time and space to act in, and opportunity to do a particular work. But in this TIME and OPPORTUNITY there is INCIDENT, what may fall in; and OCCURRENCE, what may meet and frustrate an attempt. These things should be wisely weighed, and seriously balanced; for those four things belong to every human action. While you have TIME, seek an OPPORTUNITY to do what is right; but calculate on hinderances and oppositions, because time and opportunity have their INCIDENT and OCCURRENCE. Coverdale translates this verse well: "I sawe that in runnyng, it helpeth not to be swift; in batayll, it helpeth not to be stronge; to fedyng, it helpeth not to be wyse; to riches, it helpeth not to be sutyll; to be had in favoure, it helpeth not to be connyng; but that all lyeth in time and fortune."

Verse 12. As the birds that are caught] Man acts so heedlessly, notwithstanding all his wisdom, and all his warnings, that he is often taken, as a fish is, by the baited hook; and the bird by the baited snare. And thus, an evil time, like the snare, gin, trap, hook, falleth suddenly upon them; and they are taken in a moment, and have no means of esceping. How frequently do we see these comparisons illustrated!

Verse 14. There was a little city, and few men within it] Here is another proof of the vanity of sub-lunary things; the ingratitude of men, and the little compensation that genuine merit receives. The little history mentioned here may have either been a fact, or intended as an instructive fable. A little city, with few to defend it, being besieged by a great king and a powerful army, was delivered by the cunning and address of a poor wise man; and afterwards his townsmen forgot their obligation to him.

Those who spiritualize this passage, making the little city the CHURCH, the few men the APOSTLES, the great king the DEVIL, and the poor wise man JESUS CHRIST, abuse the text.

But the Targum is not less whimsical: "The little the fishes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare; so are the sons of men <sup>1</sup> snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them.

13 This wisdom have I seen also under the sun, and it seemed great unto me:

14 <sup>m</sup> There was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a great king against it, and besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it:

city is the human body; few men in it, few good affections to work righteousness; the great king, evil concupiscence, which, like a strong and powerful king, enters into the body to oppress it, and besieges the heart so as to cause it to err; built great bulwarks against it—evil concupiscence builds his throne in it wheresoever he wills, and causes it to decline from the ways that are right before God; that it may be taken in the greatest nets of hell, that he may burn it seven times, because of its sins. But there is found in it a poor wise man—a good, wise, and holy affection, which prevails over the evil principle, and snatches the body from the judgment of hell, by the strength of its wisdom. Yet, after this deliverance, the man did not remember what the good principle had done for him; but said in his heart, I am innocent," &c.

What a wonderful text has this been in the hands of many a modern Targumist; and with what force have the Keachonians preached Christ crucified from it!

Such a passage as this receives a fine illustration from the case of Archimedes saving the city of Syracuse from all the Roman forces besieging it by sea and land. He destroyed their ships by his burning-glasses, lifted up their galleys out of the water by his machines, dashing some to pieces, and sinking others. One man's wisdom here prevailed for a long time against the most powerful exertions of a mighty nation. In this case, wisdom far exceeded strength. But was not Syracuse taken, notwithstanding the exertions of this poor wise man? No. But it was betrayed by the baseness of Mericus, a Spaniard, one of the Syracusan generals. He delivered the whole district he commanded into the hands of Marcellus, the Roman consul, Archimedes having defeated every attempt made by the Romans, either by sea or land: yet he commanded no company of men, made no sorties, but confounded and destroyed them by his machines. This happened about 208 years before Christ, and nearly about the time in which those who do not consider Solomon as the author suppose this book to have been written. This wise man was not remembered; he was slain by a Roman soldier, while deeply engaged in demonstrating a new problem, in order to his farther operations against the enemies of his country. See Plutarch, and the historians of this Syracusan war.

When Alexander the Great was about to destroy the city Lampsacus, his old master Anaximenes came out to meet him. Alexander, suspecting his design, 15 Now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city; yet no man remembered that same poor man.

that he would intercede for the city, being determined to destroy it, swore that he would not grant him any thing he should ask. Then said Anaximenes, "I desire that you will destroy this city." Alexander respected his oath, and the city was spared. Thus, says Valerius Maximus, the narrator, (lib. vii. c. iii., No. 4. Extern.) by this sudden turn of sagacity, this ancient and noble city was preserved from the destruction by which it was threatened. "Hæc velocitas sagacitatis oppidum vetusta nobilitate inclytum exitio, cui destinatum erat, subtrahit."

A stratagem of Jaddua, the high priest, was the means of preserving Jerusalem from being destroyed by Alexander, who, incensed because they had assisted the inhabitants of Gaza when he besieged it, as soon as he had reduced it, marched against Jerusalem, with the determination to raze it to the ground; but Jaddua and his priests in their sacerdotal robes, meeting him on the way, he was so struck with their appearance that he not only prostrated himself before the high priest, and spared the city, but also granted it some remarkable privileges. But the case of Archimedes and Syracuse is the most striking and appropriate in all its parts. That of Anaximenes and Lamp-

sacus is also highly illustrative of the maxim of the wise man: "Wisdom is better than strength."

Verse 16. The poor man's wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard.] I cannot help pursuing this illustration a little farther. The soldier who found Archimedes busily employed in drawing figures upon the sand, put to him some impertinent question, withal rudely obtruding himself on his operations. To whom this wonderful mathematician replied, "Stand off, soldier, and do not spoil my diagram;" on which the bloody savage struck him dead!

Verse 17. The words of wise men are heard in quiet] In the tumult of war the words of Archimedes were not heard; and his life was lost.

Verse 18. Wisdom is better than weapons of war] So proved in the case of Archimedes.

But one sinner] Such as the Roman butcher above mentioned.

Destroyeth much good] Such as were the life and skill of the Syracusan mathematician. One sinner has often injured the work of God; one stumbling-block has sometimes destroyed a revival of religion. Sin acts like a ferment; whatever comes in contact with it, it assimilates to itself.

NOTES ON CHAP. X.

Verse 1. Dead flies] Any putrefaction spoils perfume; and so a foolish act ruins the character of him who has the reputation of being wise and good. Alas! alas! in an unguarded moment how many have tarnished the reputation which they were many years in acquiring! Hence, no man can be said to be safe, till he is taken to the paradise of God.

Verse 2. A wise man's heart is at his right hand] As the right hand is ordinarily the best exercised, strongest, and most ready, and the left the contrary, they show, 1. The command which the wise man has over his own mind, feelings, passions, &c., and the prudence with which he acts. And, 2. The want of prudence and management in the fool, who has no restraint on his passions, and no rule or guard upon his tongue. The right hand and the left are used in Scripture to express good and evil. The wise man is always employed in doing good; the fool, in nonsense or evil.

5 There is an evil which I have seen under the sun, as an error which proceedeth <sup>f</sup> from the ruler:

6 <sup>g</sup> Folly is set <sup>h</sup> in great dignity, and the rich sit in low place.

7 I have seen servants <sup>i</sup> upon horses, and princes walking as servants upon the earth.

the irreligious man shows what he is. Vanity, nonsense, and wickedness are his themes: so that in effect he saith to every one that he is a fool.

Verse 4. If the spirit of the ruler rise up against thee] If the king get incensed against thee.

Leave not thy place] Humble thyself before him, that is thy place and duty; for yielding to him, and not standing stoutly in thy defence, pacifieth great offences: and then, when his anger is appeased, he will hear any thing in thy justification, if thou have any thing to offer. This is good advice to a child in reference to his parents, and to an inferior of any kind in reference to his superiors.

Several of the fathers understood this differently, If the spirit of the ruler—the influence of Satan—hath risen up against and prevailed over thee, to bring thee into some sin; leave not thy place—do not despair of God's mercy; humble thyself before him, and seek pardon through the Son of his love, and this will be חטאֵי גְדוֹלִים marpe, a remedy or cure even for חטאֵי גְדוֹלִים chataim gedolim, great errors or sins. All this is true in itself, whether found in this text or not.

Verse 5. An error which proceedeth from the ruler] What this error in the ruler is, the two following verses point out: it is simply this—an injudicious distribution of offices, and raising people to places of trust and confidence, who are destitute of merit, are neither of name nor family to excite public confidence, and are without property; so that they have no stake in the country, and their only solicitude must naturally be to enrich themselves, and provide for their poor relatives. This is frequent in the governments of the world; and favouritism has often brought prosperous nations to the brink of ruin. Folly was set in dignity; the man of property, sense, and name, in a low place. Servants—menial men, rode upon horses—carried every thing with a high and proud hand; and princes,—the nobles of the people, were obliged to walk by their sides, and often from the state of things to become in effect their servants. This was often the case in this country, during the reign of Thomas à Becket, and Cardinal Woolsey. These insolent men lorded it over the whole nation; and the people and their country were raised or depressed according as their pride and whoso breaketh a hedge, a serpent shall bite him.

9 Whoso removeth stones shall be hurt therewith; and he that cleaveth wood shall be endangered thereby.

10 If the iron be blunt, and he do not whet the edge, then must he put to more strength: but wisdom is profitable to direct.

11 Surely the serpent will bite <sup>l</sup> without enchantment; and a <sup>m</sup> babbler is no better.

and caprice willed. And, through this kind of errors, not only a few sovereigns have had most uncomfortable and troublesome reigns, but some have even lost their lives.

Verse 8. Whoso breaketh a hedge, a serpent shall bite him.] While spoiling his neighbour's property, he himself may come to greater mischief: while pulling out the sticks, he may be bit by a serpent, who has his nest there. Some have supposed that נחש nachash here means a thorn; perhaps from the similarity of its prick to the serpent's sting. He who forces his way through a hedge will be pricked by the thorns.

Verse 9. Whoso removeth stones] This verse teaches care and caution. Whoever pulls down an old building is likely to be hurt by the stones; and in cleaving wood many accidents occur for want of sufficient caution.

Verse 10. If the iron be blunt] If the axe have lost its edge, and the owner do not sharpen it, he must apply the more strength to make it cut: but the wisdom that is profitable to direct will teach him, that he should whet his axe, and spare his strength. Thus, without wisdom and understanding we cannot go profitably through the meanest concerns in life.

Verse 11. The serpent will bite without enchantment] נחש בלא להש belo lachash, without hissing. As a snake may bite before it hiss, so also will the babbler, talkative person, or calumniator. Without directly speaking evil, he insinuates, by innuendoes, things injurious to the reputation of his neighbour. עם הדיבור bite in silence, nothing lasse than he hath that פריש backbiteth.—Old MS. Bible. "A babbler of his tongue is no better than a serpent that styngeth without hyssynge."—COVERDALE. The moral of this saying is simply this: A calumniator is as dangerous as a poisonous serpent; and from the envenomed tongue of slander and detraction no man is safe. The comparing the serpent, נחש nachash, to a babbler, has something singular in it. I have already supposed that the creature mentioned, Gen. iii. 1, was of the genus simia. This has been ridiculed, but not disproved.

Verse 12. The words of a wise man's mouth] Every thing that proceeds from him is decent and 13 The beginning of the words

chievous madness.

14 <sup>r</sup> A fool also <sup>s</sup> is full of words : a man

15 The labour of the foolish weareth every orderly ; creditable to himself, and acceptable to those who hear him. But the lips of the fool, which speak every thing at random, and have no understanding to guide them, are not only not pleasant to others, but often destructive to himself.

Verse 14. A man cannot tell what shall be] A foolish babbling man will talk on every subject, though he can say as little on the past, as he can on the future.

Verse 15. He knoweth not how to go to the city.] I suppose this to be a proverb : " He knows nothing ; he does not know his way to the next village." He may labour ; but for want of judgment he wearies himself to no purpose.

Verse 16. Wo to thee, O land, when thy king is a child] Minorities are, in general, very prejudicial to a state. Regents either disagree, and foment civil wars ; or oppress the people. Various discordant interests are raised up in a state during a minority ; and the young king, having been under the tutelage of interested men, acts partially and injuriously to the interests of the people when he comes to the throne ; and this produces popular discontent, and a troubled reign.

Thy princes eat in the morning!] They do nothing in order ; turn night into day, and day into night ; sleep when they should wake, and wake when they should sleep ; attending more to chamberings and banquetings, than to the concerns of the state.

Verse 17. When thy king is the son of nobles] Υἱὸς ἐλευθέρων, the son of freemen ; persons well acquainted with the principles of civil liberty, and who rule according to them.—Septuagint. Such a one as comes to the throne in a legitimate way, from an ancient regal family, whose right to the throne is incontestable. It requires such a long time to establish a regal right, that the state is in continual danger from pretenders and usurpers, where the king is not the son of nobles.

And thy princes eat in due season] All persons in places of trust for the public weal, from the king to the lowest public functionary, should know, that the public are exceedingly scandalized at repeated accounts of entertainments, where irregularity prevails, much due season, for strength, and not for drunkenness !

18 By much slothfulness the building decayeth ; and through idleness of the hands the house droppeth through.

19 A feast is made for laughter, and <sup>w</sup> wine <sup>x</sup> maketh merry : but money answereth all things.

20 <sup>y</sup> Curse not the king, no, not in thy money is expended, and no good done. These things are drawn into precedent, and quoted to countenance debauch in the inferior classes. The natural division of the day for necessary repasts is, BREAKFAST, eight, or half after ; DINNER, one, or half after ; SUPPER, eight, or half after. And these, or even earlier hours, were formerly observed in these countries. Then we had scarcely any such thing as gout, and no nervous disorders.

In ancient nations the custom was to eat but once ;
and then about mid-day.

Verse 18. By much slothfulness] This is remarkably the case in some countries. Houses are not repaired till they almost fall about the ears of the inhabitants. We have an adage that applies to all such cases : " A stitch in time saves nine."

Verse 19. A feast is made for laughter] The object of it is to produce merriment, to banish care and concern of every kind. But who are they who make and frequent such places ? Epicures and drunkards generally ; such as those of whom Horace speaks .

Nos numerus sumus, et fruges consumere nati,
Epist. lib. i., ep. 2, ver. 27.

" Those whose names stand as indications of men, the useless many ; and who appear to be born only to consume the produce of the soil."

But money answereth all] This saying has prevailed everywhere.

*Scilicet uxorem cum dote, fidemque, et amicos,
Et genus, et formam REGINA PECUNIA donat ;
Ac bene nummatum decorat Suadela, Venusque.*

Hor. Ep. lib. i., ep. 6, ver. 36

" For gold, the sovereign QUEEN of all below,
Friends, honour, birth, and beauty, can bestow.
The goddess of persuasion forms her train ;
And Venus decks the well-bemomed swain."

FRANCIS.

Verse 20. Curse not the king] Do not permit thy self even to think evil of the king ; lest thy tongue at some time give vent to thy thoughts, and so thou be chargeable with treason.

For a bird of the air shall carry the voice] Does he refer here to such fowls as the carrier pigeon, which were often used to carry letters under their wings to a great distance, and bring back answers? The Targum turns it curiously: "Do not speak evil of the king in thy conscience, nor in the secret of thy heart, nor in the most hidden place in thy house, curse not a wise man; for Raziel calls daily from heaven upon Mount Horeb, and his voice goes through the whole world; and Elijah, the great priest, goes, flying through the air like a winged eagle, and publishes the words which are spoken in secret by all the inhabitants of the earth."

Civil government is so peculiarly of God, that he will have it supported for the benefit of mankind; and those who attempt to disturb it are generally marked by his strong disapprobation. And though there have been multitudes of treasons hatched in the deepest secrecy; yet, through the providence of God, they have been discovered in the most singular manner. This shows God's care for government.

NOTES ON CHAP. XI.

Verse 1. Cast thy bread upon the waters] An allusion to the sowing of rice; which was sown upon muddy ground, or ground covered with water, and trodden in by the feet of cattle: it thus took root, and grew, and was found after many days in a plentiful harvest. Give alms to the poor, and it will be as seed sown in good ground. God will cause thee afterwards to receive it with abundant increase. The Targum understands it of giving bread to poor sailors. The Vulgate and my old Bible have the same idea. Send thy bread upon men passing waters.

Verse 2. Give a portion to seven] Never cease giving while thou seest a person in distress, and hast wherewithal to relieve him.

Thou knowest not what evil] Such may be the change of times, that thou mayest yet stand in need of similar help thyself. Do as thou wouldst be done by.

Verse 3. If the clouds be full of rain.] Act as the clouds; when they are full they pour out their water indifferently on the field and on the desert. By giving charity indiscriminately, it may be that thou wilt often give it to the unworthy; but thou shouldst ever consider that he is an object of thy charity, who appears to be in real want; and better relieve or give to a hundred worthless persons, than pass by one who is in real distress.

Where the tree falleth, there it shall be.] Death is at no great distance; thou hast but a short time to do good. Acquire a heavenly disposition while here; for there will be no change after this life. If thou die in the love of God, and in the love of man, in that state wilt thou be found in the day of judgment. If a tree about to fall lean to the north, no the north it will fall; if to the south, it will fall to that quarter. In whatever disposition or state of soul thou diest, in that thou wilt be found in the eternal world. Death refines nothing, purifies nothing, kills no sin, helps to no glory. Let thy continual bent and inclination be to God, to holiness, to charity, to mercy, and to heaven: then, fall when thou mayest, thou wilt fall well.

Verse 4. He that observeth the wind shall not sow] The man that is too scrupulous is never likely to succeed in any thing. If a man neither plough nor sow till the weather is entirely to his mind, the season will in all probability pass before he will have done any thing: so, if thou be too nice in endeavouring to find out who are the impostors among those who profess to be in want, the real object may perish, whom otherwise thou mightest have relieved, and whose life might have been thereby saved. Those very punctilious and scrupulous people, who will sift every thing to the bottom in every case, and, before they will act, must be fully satisfied on all points, seldom do any good, and are themselves generally good for nothing. While they are observing the clouds and the rain, others have joined hands with God, and made a poor man live.

Verse 5. As thou knowest not—the way of the spirit] Why God should have permitted such and such persons to fall into want, and how they came into all their distresses, thou canst not tell, no more than thou canst how their soul is united to their body, how it came to inform that body, or how the child was formed in the womb of its mother. Nor canst thou discern the end which God has in view in these things. He maketh all, every thing is open to him; and take

6 In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether <sup>i</sup> shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good.

7 Truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes <sup>k</sup> to behold the sun:

8 But if a man live many years, and re-heed lest, while pretending motives of scrupulosity and prudence, in not relieving the distresses of those thou pretendest to suspect to be unworthy, he does not see that a love of money is the motive of thy conduct, and a want of the bowels of mercy the cause why thou drivest this suspected beggar from thy door.

Verse 6. In the morning sow thy seed] Be ready at all times to show mercy; begin in the morning, continue till the evening. Thou knowest not the most worthy object; it is enough that God knoweth; and if thy motive be good, he will applaud and reward thee; not according to the worthiness or unworthiness of the object of thy charity, but according to the motive which induced thee to relieve him.

Verse 7. Truly the light is sweet] Life is dear to every man as the light of the sun is to the eye. A man would give all that he has for his life; and it is particularly dear to him when he is in ease and affluence: but let each remember that,

Verse 8. If a man live many years] And even have prosperity through the whole; yet the days of darkness—times of affliction, weakness, and perhaps old age, will be many. If he die not a violent death, which no man can wish, he will die a lingering death; and this is ordinarily attended with many pains, and many sorrows; therefore let him prepare to meet his joy in them all; yet let him remember the days of darkness: for they shall be many. All that cometh is vanity.

9 Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, <sup>l</sup> and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: but know thou, that for all these things <sup>m</sup> God will bring thee into judgment.

God; and to carry this thought through life, that all must terminate in death. The writer of Ecclesiasticus, chap. vii. 36, has a good saying, similar to this: "Whatsoever thou takest in hand, remember thy end; and thou shalt never do amiss;" οὐκ ἁμαρτησεις, thou wilt not sin.

Verse 9. Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth] Youth is devoid of cares; and, consequently, of many perplexities and distresses. Were it not so, we should have no old men; nay, perhaps not one even of middle age. It is in the order of a most gracious God, that the young should rejoice in their youth; but they should make such a moderate use of all their enjoyments, that they may not be confounded in the day of judgment. But, O young man, if thou wilt follow the propensities of thy own heart, the noisy mirth of the fool, and the dissipation of the profligate—go on; take thy full swing; but take this with thee, that "for all these things, God will judge thee;" and if the righteous are scarcely saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?

Verse 10. Therefore remove sorrow] בְּיָסַר caas, anger; every kind of violent passion, all filthiness of the flesh and spirit. "Childhood and youth are vanity;" they pass away and come to nothing. Eternity alone is permanent; live for eternity.

it is in the singular number, בֹּרֵאךְ Borecha, in one hundred and seventy-six of Dr. Kennicott's MSS., and ninety-six of De Rossi's; in many ancient editions; and in all the ancient versions. There is no dependence on the plural form in most of the modern editions ; though there are some editions of great worth which exhibit the word in this form, and among them the Complutensian, Antwerp, Paris, and London polyglots.

The evidence, therefore, that this text is supposed to give to the doctrine of the ever blessed Trinity, is but precarious, and on it little stress can be laid ; and no man who loves truth would wish to support it by dubious witnesses. Injudicious men, by laying stress on texts dubious in themselves, and which may be interpreted a different way, greatly injure the true faith. Though such in their hearts may be friends to the orthodox faith, they are in fact its worst friends, and their assistance is such as helps their adversaries.

But what does the text say ? It addresses the youth of both sexes throughout the creation ; and says in effect :—

I. You are not your own, you have no right to yourselves. God made you ; he is your Creator : he made you that you might be happy ; but you can be happy only in him. And as he created you, so he preserves you ; he feeds, clothes, upholds you. He has made you capable of knowing, loving, and serving him in this world, and of enjoying him in his own glory for ever. And when you had undone yourselves by sin, he sent his Son to redeem you by his blood ; and he sends his Spirit to enlighten, convince, and draw you away from childishness, from vain and trifling, as well as from sinful, pursuits.

II. Remember him ; consider that he is your Creator, your loving and affectionate Father. In youth memory is strong and tenacious ; but, through the perversion of the heart by sin, young people can remember any thing better than God. If you get a kindness from a friend, you can remember that, and feel gratitude for it ; and the person is therefore deared to you. Have any ever given you such benefits as your Creator ? Your body and soul came from him ; he gave you your eyes, ears, tongue, hands, feet, &c. What blessings are these ! how excellent ! how useful ! how necessary ! and will you forget him ?

III. Remember him in thy youth, in order that you may have a long and blessed life, that you may be saved from the corruption and misery into which young people in general run ; and the evils they entail upon themselves by giving way to the sinful propensities of their own hearts. As in youth all the powers are more active and vigorous, so they are capable of superior enjoyments. Faith, hope, and love, will be in their best tenor, their greatest vigour, and in their least encumbered state. And it will be easier for you to believe, hope, pray, love, obey, and bear your cross, than it can be in old age and decrepitude.

IV. Remember him now, in this part of your youth—you have no certainty of life ; now is yours, to-morrow may not be. You are young ; but you may never be old. Now he waits to be gracious ; to-morrow may be too late. God now calls ; his Spirit now strives ; his ministers now exhort. You have now health ; sin has not now so much dominion over you as it will have, increasing by every future moment, if you do not give up your hearts to your Maker.

V. There is another consideration which should weigh with you : should you live to old age, it is a very disadvantageous time to begin to serve the Lord in. Infirmities press down both body and mind, and the oppressed nature has enough to do to bear its own infirmities ; and as there is little time, so there is generally less inclination, to call upon the Lord. Evil habits are strengthened by long continuance ; and every desire and appetite in the soul is a strong hold for Satan. There is little time for repentance, little for faith, none for obedience. The evil days are come, and the years in which you will feelingly be obliged to say, Alas ! “ we have no pleasure in them ; ” and, what is worse, the heart is hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

Verse 2. While the sun, or the light, or the moon, or the stars, be not darkened] i. e., in the spring, prime, and prosperity of life.

Nor the clouds return] The infirmities of old age, of which winter is a proper emblem, as spring is of youth, in the former clause of this verse.

Verse 3. In the day when the keepers of the house] The body of man is here compared to a house :—mark the metaphors and their propriety.

1. The keepers shall tremble—the hands become paralytic, as is constantly the case, less or more, in old age.

2. The strong men shall bow] The legs become feeble, and unable to support the weight of the body.

3. The grinders cease because they are few] The teeth decayed and mostly lost ; the few that remain being incapable of properly masticating hard substances or animal food. And so they cease ; for soft or pulpy substances, which are requisite then, require little or no mastication ; and these aliments become their ordinary food.

4. Those that look out of the windows] The optic nerves, which receive impressions, through the medium of the different humours of the eye, from surrounding objects—they are darkened ; the humours becoming thick, flat, and turbid, they are no longer capable of transmitting those images in that clear, distinct manner, as formerly. There may be an allusion here to the pupil of the eye. Look into it, and you will see your own image in extreme miniature looking out upon you ; and hence it has its name pupillus, a little child, from pupus, a baby, a doll ; because the image in the eye resembles such. The optic nerve being seated at the bottom of the eye, has the images of surrounding objects painted upon it ; it looks out through the different humours. The different membranes and humours which

5 Also when they shall be afraid of that compose the eye, and serve for vision, are, the tunica conjunctiva, the tunica sclerotica, the cornea, the iris, the pupil, the choroides, and the retina. The iris is perforated to admit the rays of light, and is called the pupil; the retina is a diffusion of the optic nerve in the bottom of the eye, on which the images are painted or impressed that give us the sensation we term sight or vision. All these membranes, humours, and nerves, are more or less impaired, thickened, or rendered opaque, by old age; expressed by the metaphor, "Those that look out of the windows are darkened."

Verse 4. And the doors shall be shut in the streets]

5. The doors—the lips, which are the doors by which the mouth is closed.

6. Be shut in the streets] The cavities of the cheeks and jaws, through which the food may be said to travel before it is fited by mastication or chewing to go down the œsophagus into the stomach. The doors or lips are shut to hinder the food in chewing from dropping out; as the teeth, which prevented that before, are now lost.

7. The sound of the grinding is low] Little noise is now made in eating, because the teeth are either lost, or become so infirm as not to suffer their being pressed close together; and the mouth being kept shut to hinder the food from dropping out, the sound in eating is scarcely heard. The teeth are divided into three kinds:—1. The dentes incisores, or cutting teeth, in the front of the jaw. 2. The dentes canini, or dog teeth, those in the sides of the jaws, for gnawing, or tearing and separating hard or tough substances. And, 3. Dentes molares, or grinding teeth, the posterior or double teeth, in both jaws, generally termed the grinders; because their office is to grind down the substances that have been cut by the fore teeth, separated into their parts or fibres by the dog teeth, and thus prepare it for digestion in the stomach.

8. He shall rise up at the voice of the bird] His sleep is not sound as it used to be; he slumbers rather than sleeps; and the crowing of the cock awakes him. And so much difficulty does he find to respire while in bed, that he is glad of the dawn to rise up and get some relief. The chirping of the sparrow is sufficient to awake him.

9. All the daughters of music shall be brought low] The voice, that wonderful instrument, almost endless in the strength and variety of its tones, becomes feeble and squaking, and merriment and pleasure are no more. The tones emitted are all of the querulous or mournful kind.

Verse 5. When they shall be afraid of that which is high] selves to ascend steps, stairs, &c., without help. And when they look upwards, their heads turn giddy, and they are ready to fall.

11. Fears shall be in the way] They dare not walk out, lest they should meet some danger, which they have not strength to repel, nor agility to escape. A second childishness has taken place—apprehensions, fears, terrors, and weakness.

12. The almond tree shall flourish] אֲמָלִים yenaets, not flourish, but fall off. The hair begins to change, first gray, then white; it having no longer that supply of nutritive juices which it once had, this animal vegetable withers and falls off. The almond tree, having white flowers, is a fit emblem of a hoary head; or as Hasselquist says, who observed the tree in full flower in Judea, "like an old man with his white locks."

13. The grasshopper shall be a burden] Even such an inconsiderable thing as a locust, or a very small insect, shall be deemed burdensome, their strength is so exceedingly diminished. In cases of the gout, especially in old men, the shadow of a person passing by puts them to acute pain! How much less can they bear the smallest pressure! But probably the words refer to the man himself, who, bent at the loins, and his arms hanging down, exhibits some caricature of the animal in question. The poor grasshopper has become a burden to himself. Another interpretation has been given of the grasshopper; but I pass it by as impertinent and contemptible; such commentators appear as if they wished to render the text ridiculous.

14. Desire shall fail] Both relish and appetite for food, even the most delicate, that to which they were formerly so much attached, now fails. The teeth are no longer able to masticate the food, or have all dropped out; the stomach no longer able to digest any thing; and, as the body is no longer capable of receiving nourishment, appetite and relish necessarily fail.

15. Because man goeth to his long home] אֶל בֵּיתוֹ el beith olamo, "to the house of his age;" the place destined to receive him, when the whole race or course of life shall be finished; for אֶלֶם alam takes in the whole course or duration of a thing; if applied to a dispensation, such as the LAW, it takes in its whole duration; to the life of man, it takes in the whole life; to time, it includes its whole compass; to eternity, it expresses its infinite duration. So old age terminates the alam, the complete duration of human life; and when life is no longer desired, and nutrition ceases, the alam of man is terminated. My old MS. Bible translates it, The house of his everlastingness.

16. He is just departing into the invisible world; and this is known by the mourners going about the streets, the long hollow groans and throat rattlings which proceed from him ; the sure prognostications of the extreme debility and speedy cessation of those essential animal functions next mentioned.

Verse 6. Or ever the silver cord be loosed] We have already had all the external evidences of old age, with all its attendant infirmities ; next follow what takes place in the body, in order to produce what is called death, or the separation of body and soul.

1. The silver cord.—The medulla oblongata or spinal marrow, from which all the nerves proceed, as itself does from the brain. This is termed a cord, from its exact similitude to one ; and a silver cord, from its colour, as it strikingly exhibits the silver gray ; and from its preciousness. This is said to be loosed ; as the nervous system became a little before, and at the article of death, wholly debilitated. The last loosing being the fall of the under jaw, the invariable and never-failing evidence of immediate death ; a few struggles more, and the soul is dismissed from its clay tenement.

2. The golden bowl be broken] The brain contained in the cranium, or skull, and enveloped with the membranes called the dura and pia mater ; here called a bowl, from its resemblance to such a vessel, the container being put for the contained ; and golden because of its colour, and because of its exceeding preciousness, as has been noticed in the former case. Broken—be rendered unfit to perform its functions, neither supplying nor distributing any nervous energy.

3. Or the pitcher be broken at the fountain] The vena cava, which brings back the blood to the right ventricle of the heart, here called the fountain, הככני hammabbua, the spring whence the water gushes up ; properly applied here to the heart, which by its systole and diastole (contraction and expansion) sends out, and afterwards receives back, the blood ; for all the blood flows from, and returns back to, the heart.

4. The wheel broken at the cistern] The great aorta, which receives the blood from the cistern, the left ventricle of the heart, and distributes it to the different parts of the system. These may be said, as in the case of the brain above, to be broken, i. e., rendered useless ; when, through the loosening of the silver cord, the total relaxation of the nervous system, the heart becomes incapable of dilatation and contraction, so that the blood, on its return to the right ventricle of the heart, is not received, nor that already contained in the ventricles propelled into the great aorta. The wheel is used in allusion to the Asiatic wheels, by which they raise water from their wells and tanks, and deep cisterns, for domestic purposes, or to irrigate the grounds. Thus, then, the blood becomes stagnate ; the lungs cease to respire ; the blood is no longer oxidized ; all motion, voluntary and involuntary, ceases ; the body, the house of the immortal spirit, is no longer tenable, and the soul takes its flight into the eternal world. The man D—I—E—S ! This is expressed in the following verse :—

Verse 7. Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was : and the spirit shall return unto God]

5. Putrefaction and solution take place ; the whole mass becomes decomposed, and in process of time is reduced to dust, from which it was originally made ; while the spirit, הרוח haruach, that spirit, which God at first breathed into the nostrils of man, when he in consequence became a LIVING SOUL, an intelligent, rational, discoursing animal, returns to God who gave it. Here the wise man makes a most evident distinction between the body and the soul : they are not the same ; they are not both matter. The body, which is matter, returns to dust, its original ; but the spirit, which is immaterial, returns to God. It is impossible that two natures can be more distinct, or more emphatically distinguished. The author of this book was not a materialist.

Thus ends this affecting, yet elegant and finished, picture of OLD AGE and DEATH. See a description of old age similar, but much inferior, to this, in the Agamemnon of Æschylus, v. 76–82.

It has been often remarked that the circulation of the blood, which has been deemed a modern discovery by our countryman Dr. Harvey, in 1616, was known to Solomon, or whoever was the author of this book : the fountains, cisterns, pitcher, and wheel, giving sufficient countenance to the conclusion.

Verse 8. This affecting and minute description of old age and death is concluded by the author with the same exclamation by which he began this book : O vanity of vanities, saith Koheleth, all is vanity. Now that man, the masterpiece of God's creation, the delegated sovereign of this lower world, is turned to dust, what is there stable or worthy of contemplation besides ? ALL—ALL IS VANITY !

Verse 9. Because the Preacher was wise, he still taught the people knowledge] And in order to do this he took good heed—considered what would be most useful. He set in order—collected and arranged, many parables, probably alluding to the book over which we have already passed.

Verse 10. He sought to find out acceptable words] חפץ dibrey chephets, words of desire, words of will ; the best, the most suitable words ; those which 11 The words of the wise are as goads, and as nails fastened by the masters of assemblies, which are given from one shepherd.

12 And farther, by these, my son, be admonished : of making many books there is no

the people could best understand. But these words were not such as might merely please the people ; they were words of truth ; such as came from God, and might lead them to him.

Verse 11. The words of the wise] Doctrines of faith, illustrated by suitable language, are as nails fastened by the masters of assemblies, בעלי אספות baaley asuphoth, the masters of collections, those who had made the best collections of this kind, the matter of which was of the most excellent nature ; every saying sinking as deeply into the mind, by the force of the truth contained in it, as a nail well pointed does into a board, when impelled by the hammer's force. These masters of collections have been supposed to be public persons appointed by the prince himself, the sole shepherd, to see that nothing was put into the people's hands but what would be profitable for them to read ; and that, when any wise man gave public instructions, a good scribe sat by to take down the words ; and then the master examined what he had written, to see that it was upright, and that the words were doctrines of truth. These were something like our licensors of the press ; but the existence of such is little more than conjecture.

After all, masters of assemblies may mean public teachers ; that which was written, the oracles of God, out of which they instructed the people ; the one Shepherd, God ALMIGHTY, from whom they received their authority and unction to preach the truth ; and by the energy of whose Spirit the heavenly teaching was fastened in their hearts, as a well-driven nail in a sound piece of wood.

Verse 12. And farther, by these, my son, be admonished] Hear such teachers, and receive their admonitions ; and do not receive the grace of God in vain.

Of making many books there is no end] Two thousand years have elapsed since this was written ; and since that time some millions of treatises have been added, on all kinds of subjects, to those which have gone before. The press is still groaning under and teeming with books, books innumerable ; and no one subject is yet exhausted, notwithstanding all that has been written on it. And we who live in these latter times are no nearer an end, in the investigation of NATURE and its properties ; of God, his attributes, his providence, his justice, and his mercy ; of MAN, his animal life, his mode of nutrition and existence, and his soul and its powers ; of JESUS, and the redemption by him ; of ETERNITY, and what it implies as exhibiting to us the pains of the cursed, and the end ; and much study is a weariness of the flesh.

13 Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter : Fear God, and keep his commandments : for this is the whole duty of man.

14 For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.

glories of the blessed. Of several of these we know no more than they who have lived five thousand years before us ; nor do we know any thing certainly by the endless books that have been published, except what bears the seal of the God of heaven, as published in that word which was declared by his Spirit.

And much study is a weariness of the flesh.] O how true is this ! Let the trembling knees, the palsied hands, the darkened eyes, the aching heart, and the puzzled mind of every real student declare ! And should none more worthy of the name of student be within reach to consult, the writer of this work is a proof in point.

Verse 13. After all, the sum of the great business of human life is comprised in this short sentence, on which some millions of books have been already written !

FEAR GOD, AND KEEP HIS COMMANDMENTS.

1. Know that HE is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. 2. Reverence him ; pay him adoration. 3. Love him, that you may be happy.

Keep his commandments] They are contained in two words : 1. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart ;" 2. "And thy neighbour as thyself." Blessed be God, much reading and much study are not necessary to accomplish this, which is called כל האדם col haadam, the whole of Adam ; the whole that God required of the first man and of all his posterity. But the Gospel of Jesus Christ must be understood to comprehend the full force of this short saying.

The word duty, added here by our translators, spoils, if not perverts, the sense.

The whole passage is rendered with great simplicity by Coverdale :—

"The same preacher was not wyse alone : but taught the people knowledge also. He gave good hede, sought out the grounde, and set forth many parables. His diligence was to fynde out acceptable wordes, right scripture, and the wordes of trueth. For the wordes of the wyse are like prickes and nale that go thorow, wherewith men are kepte together for they are geven of one Shepherd onely. Therefore be warre (my sonne) that above these thou make thee not many and innumerable bookes, nor take dyverse doctrynes in hande, to weery thy body withall.

"Let us heare the concludon of all thinges : Feare God, and kepe his comaundermentes, for that toucheth all men; for God shall judge all workes and secrete things, whether they be good or evell."

I shall give the same from my old MS. Bible:—

And wan Ecclesiastes was most wiss he taght the people, and told out what he had don, and enscreefinge maade many parabliss. He soght profitable wordss, and wrote most rígt sermons, and ful of trewth. The wordss of wisemen as prískiss and as nálliss into herte pígt; that bñ the counseyle of maisterss ben geben of oon scheperd. More thann thes sone myn, ne seche thou; of making many bokess is noon end, and oft bethinkingss tormenting of the flesche. End of spekinge alle toggdr here mee. Drede God, and hñs bestss kepe; that is ethe man. Alle thýngss that ben maad he schal bringen into dome, for ethe erd thýng, wñsthyr good or evyl ft be.

Verse 14. For God shall bring every work into judgment] This is the reason why we should "fear God and keep his commandments." 1. Because there will be a day of judgment. 2. Every soul of man shall stand at that bar. 3. God, the infinitely wise, the heart-searching God, will be judge. 4. He will bring to light every secret thing—all that has been done since the creation, by all men; whether forgotten or registered; whether done in secret or in public.

5. All the works of the godly, as well as all the works of the wicked, shall be judged in that day; the good which the godly strove to conceal, as well as the evil which the wicked endeavoured to hide. This, then, will be the conclusion of the whole mortal story. And although in this world all is vanity; yet there, "vanities will be vain no more." Every thing, whether good or evil, will have its own proper, stable, eternal result. O God! prepare the reader to give up his accounts with joy in that day! Amen.

INTRODUCTION

---

THE book before us is called in the Hebrew שיר השירים SHIR HASHSHIRIM, "The Song of Songs;" or, "An Ode of the Odes:" which might be understood, "An Ode taken or selected from others of a similar kind;" or, "An Ode the most excellent of all others;" this being an idiom common to the Hebrew language: e. g., the God of gods is the supreme God; the Lord of lords, the supreme Lord; the King of kings, the supreme King; the heaven of heavens, the supreme or highest heaven. It may therefore be designed to express "a song of the utmost perfection; one of the best that existed, or had ever been penned." Perhaps the title may have a reference to the other poetical compositions of Solomon, which were no less than one thousand and five; and this was considered the most excellent of the whole, and the only one that remains, unless we suppose Solomon, with some of the Jews, to be the author of Psalms lxxii. and cxxvii.: but this cannot be proved.

There have been some doubts concerning the author of this book. Some of the rabbins supposed it to be the work of the prophet Isaiah; but this sentiment never gained much credit. Most have, without hesitation, attributed it to Solomon, whose name it bears; and if the book of Ecclesiastes be his, this will follow in course, as the style is exactly the same, allowing for the difference of the subject. Both books seem to have been written about the same time, and to have had the same author.

This book, if written by Solomon, could not have been written in his old age, as some have supposed the book of Ecclesiastes to have been; which sentiment is, I think, sufficiently disproved; for we find that long before Solomon's old age he had three hundred wives, and seven hundred concubines; but at the time this Song was written, Solomon had only sixty wives and eighty concubines. And the Song most certainly celebrates a marriage; whether between Solomon and the daughter of Pharaoh, or between him and some Jewish princess, has not been fully agreed on among critics and commentators. It is most likely to have been a juvenile or comparatively juvenile production; and indeed the high and glowing colouring, and the strength of the images, are full proofs of this. Though Anacreon made amatory odes when he was bald-headed, yet neither he nor any one else, humanly speaking, could have made such odes as the Canticles when stricken in years.

But to what denomination of writing do the Canticles belong? Are they mere Odes, or Idyls, or Pastorals; or are they an Epithalamium? Let us define these terms, and examine the Song of Solomon by them. 1. The ODE is generally understood to be a species of poetry containing sublime and important matter, always sung, or accompanied by the harp, or some proper musical instrument. 2. The IDYL implies a short poem, containing some adventure. 3. The PASTORAL contains what belongs to shepherds, and their occupations. 4. The EPITHALAMIUM is the congratulatory song, sung to a new married pair, wishing them abundant blessings, a numerous and happy offspring, &c. Strictly speaking, the book or Canticles falls under neither of these descriptions: it is rather a composition sui generis, and seems to partake more of the nature of what we call a MASK, than any thing else; an entertainment for the guests who attended the marriage ceremony, with a dramatic cast throughout the whole, though the persons who speak and act are not formally introduced. There are so many touches in the form and manner of this Song like those in the Comus of Milton, that it leads me to doubt whether the English poet has not taken the idea of his mask from the Jewish.

As to the persons, chiefly concerned, it is generally believed that Solomon and Pharaoh's daughter are the bridegroom and bride; with their proper attendants, viz., companions of the bridegroom, and companions of the bride, with certain mutes, who only appear, or are mentioned by others, without taking any particular part in the transactions.

But it is much more easy to be satisfied on the species of composition to which this book belongs, than on the meaning of the book itself. Is it to be understood in the obvious manner in which it presents itself? And are Solomon and his bride, their friends and companions, to be considered as mere dramatis personæ? Or are they typical or representative persons? Does this marriage represent a celestial union? Do the speeches of each contain Divine doctrines? * Are the metaphors, taken from earthly things, to be understood of spiritual matters? In a word, does Solomon here represent Jesus Christ? Is the daughter of Pharaoh the Christian Church; or, according to some Roman Catholics, the Virgin Mary? Are watchmen, vineyard-keepers, shepherds, &c., the ministers of the Gospel? Wine and various fruits, the influences and graces of the Divine Spirit? &c., &c. How multitudinous and positive are the affirmative answers to these questions! And yet, though the many agree in the general principle, how various their expositions of the different parts of the piece! And where, all this time, is the proof that the principle is not misunderstood? As to conjectures, they are as uncertain as they are endless; and what one pious or learned man may think to be the meaning, is no proof to any other that he should make up his mind in the same way.

Let us for a moment consider the different opinions held on this book, without entering into the discussion of their propriety or impropriety. They are the following:—

I. It is a plain epithalamium on the marriage of Solomon with the daughter of Pharaoh, king of Egypt; and is to be understood in no other way.

II. It is an allegory relative to the conduct of God towards the Hebrews, in bringing them out of Egypt through the wilderness to the Promised Land.

III. It is intended to represent the incarnation of Jesus Christ, or his marriage with human nature, in reference to its redemption.

IV. It represents Christ's love to the Church or elected souls, and their love to him.

V. It is an allegorical poem on the glories of Jesus Christ and the Virgin Mary.

VI. It is a collection of sacred idyls; the spiritual meaning of which is not agreed on.

Now each of these opinions has its powerful supporters, and each of these has reasons to offer for the support of the opinion which is espoused; and nothing but a direct revelation from God can show us which of these opinions is the correct one, or whether any of them are correct.

The antiquity of an opinion, if that be not founded on a revelation from God, is no evidence of its truth; for there are many ungodly opinions which are more than a thousand years old. And as to great men and great names, we find them enrolled and arranged on each side of all controversies. It may be asked, What do Christ and his apostles say of it?

1. If Jesus Christ or any of his apostles had referred to it as an allegory, and told us the subject which it pointed out, the matter would have been plain: we should then have had data, and had only to proceed in the way of elucidation. But we find nothing of this in the New Testament.

2. If they had referred to it as an allegory, without intimating the meaning; then we should be justified in searching everywhere for that meaning; and conjecture itself would have been legal, till we had arrived at some self-testifying issue.

3. If they had referred to it at all, in connection with spiritual subjects, then we should have at once seen that it was to be spiritually understood; and, comparing spiritual things with spiritual, we must have humbly sought for its spiritual interpretation.

4. Had the Supreme Being been introduced, or referred to in any of his essential attributes, or by any of the names which he has been pleased to assume in his revelations to men, we should have then seen that the writer was a spiritual man, and wrote probably in reference to a spiritual end; and, that we should pass by or through his letter, in order to get to the spirit concealed under it. But none of these things appear in this book: the name of God is not found in it; nor is it quoted in the New Testament. As to certain references which its allegorical expositors suppose are made to it, either in the Gospels, Epistles, or Apocalypse, they are not express, and do not, by any thing in or connected with them, appear unequivocally to point out this book. And after all that has been said, I am fully of opinion it is not once referred to in the New Testament. But this is no proof of its not being canonical, as there are other books, on which there is no doubt, that are in the same predicament. But still, if it refer so distinctly to Christ and his Church, as some suppose, it certainly would not have been passed over by both evangelists and apostles without pointed and especial notice; and particularly if it points out the love of Christ to his Church, and the whole economy of God's working in reference to the salvation of the souls of men.

From all this it will appear to the intelligent reader, that the spiritual meaning of this book cannot easily be made out: 1. Because we do not know that it is an allegory. 2. If one, the principles on which such allegory is to be explained do nowhere appear.

Whom then are we to follow in the interpretation of this very singular book? The Targumist, who applies it to God and the Hebrews, in their journeyings from Egypt to the promised land? Origen, who made it a Christian allegory? Apponius, who spiritualized it? Gregory the Great, who in the main copied them? The good man, who in 1717, at Paris, so illustrated it as "to induce men to devote themselves to Jesus Christ and the Virgin Mary?" Mr. Durham, Mr. Robotham, Mr. Ainsworth, Mr. Romaine, and Dr. Gill, who endeavoured to prove that it concerns Christ and the elect? Or Mr. Harmer and others, who acknowledged it to be an inimitable composition, and to be understood only of Solomon and Pharaoh's daughter? Or, finally, Dr. Mason Good, who considers it a collection of sacred idyls, the spiritual interpretation of which is not agreed on?

I had for a long time hesitated whether I should say any thing on this book; not because I did not think I understood its chief design and general meaning, for of this I really have no doubt, but because I did not understand it as a spiritual allegory, representing the loves of Christ and his Church. I must own I see no indubitable ground for this opinion. And is it of no moment whether the doctrines drawn from it, by those who allegorize and spiritualize it, be indubitably founded on it or not? The doctrines may be true in themselves, (which is indeed more than can be said of those of most of its interpreters,) but is it not a very solemn, and indeed awful thing to say, This is the voice of Christ to his Church, This is the voice of the Church to Christ, &c., &c., when there is no proof from God, nor from any other portion of his word, that these things are so?

It is much better, therefore, if explained or illustrated at all, to take it in its literal meaning, and explain it in its general sense. I say general sense, because there are many passages in it which should not be explained, if taken literally, the references being too delicate; and Eastern phraseology on such subjects is too vivid for European imaginations. Let any sensible and pious medical man read over this book, and, if at all acquainted with Asiatic phraseology, say whether it would be proper, even in medical language, to explain all the descriptions and allusions in this poem.

After what I have said on the difficulty of interpreting this book in a spiritual way, it would not be fair to withhold from the reader the general arguments on which the theory of its allegorical meaning is founded. The principal part of the commentators on this book, especially those who have made it their separate study, have in general taken it for granted that their mode of interpretation is incontrovertible; and have proceeded to spiritualize every figure and every verse as if they had a Divine warrant for all they have said. Their conduct is dangerous ; and the result of their well-intentioned labours has been of very little service to the cause of Christianity in general, or to the interests of true morality in particular. By their mode of interpretation an undignified, not to say mean and carnal, language has been propagated among many well-meaning religious people, that has associated itself too much with selfish and animal affections, and created feelings that accorded little with the dignified spirituality of the religion of the Lord Jesus. I speak not from report ; I speak from observation and experience, and observation not hastily made. The conviction on my mind and the conclusion to which I have conscientiously arrived, are the result of frequent examination, careful reading, and close thinking, at intervals, for nearly fifty years ; and however I may be blamed by some, and pitied by others, I must say, and I say it as fearlessly as I do conscientiously, that in this inimitably fine elegant Hebrew ode I see nothing of Christ and his Church, and nothing that appears to have been intended to be thus understood ; and nothing, if applied in this way, that, per se, can promote the interests of vital godliness, or cause the simple and sincere not to “ know Christ after the flesh.” Here I conscientiously stand. May God help me !

The most rational view of the subject that I have seen is that taken by Mr. Harmer, who has indeed detailed and strengthened the arguments of his predecessors who have declared for the spiritual meaning. In his “ Outlines of a Comment upon Solomon’s Song,” he supposes that the Song refers to Solomon’s marriage with the daughter of Pharaoh ; and that he had a Jewish queen, who is frequently referred to in the work ; and that, unless this be allowed, there are several important passages in the book that cannot be understood ; and indeed it is on this principle that he finds his chief ground for a spiritual and allegorical interpretation.

“ Whatever was the intention of God,” says he, “ in bringing about this marriage, and in causing it to be celebrated in such an extraordinary manner, by songs that were directed to be placed among the sacred writings, it is certain there never was any resemblance more striking between the circumstances and transactions of any of the remarkable personages of the Old Testament and those of Messiah, than the likeness we may observe between Solomon marrying a Gentile princess, and making her equal in honour and privileges with his former Jewish queen, and in her being frequently mentioned afterwards in history, while the other is passed over in total silence, and the conduct of the Messiah towards the Gentile and Jewish Churches.

“ The two remarkable things in the conduct of the Messiah towards the two Churches are the making the Gentiles fellow heirs of the same body and partakers of the promises, without any difference ; and the giving up to neglect the Jewish Church, while that of the Gentiles has long flourished in great honour, and been the subject of many a history. St. Paul takes notice of both these circumstances with particular solemnity ; of the first, in the third chapter of Ephesians, and elsewhere ; of the other, in the eleventh chapter of Romans. They are points, then, that deserve great attention.

“ They are both called mysteries, (Rom. xi. 25, Eph. iii. 3,) that is, things that had been concealed aforetime ; but it by no means follows that there were no shadowy representations of these events in the preceding ages, only that they were not clearly and expressly revealed.

“ Kingdoms and cities are frequently spoken of in holy writ as women. Sacred as well as secular bodies of men are represented under that image. The universal Church is spoken of under the notion of a bride, and the Messiah as her husband, Eph. v. The two Churches of Jews and Gentiles, or the Church under the Mosaic dispensation and the Church freed from those ceremonies, are represented as two women—the one formerly treated as the principal wife ; and the second, as having been for a long time neglected, but afterwards producing a much more numerous issue than the first—by the prophet Isaiah in his fifty-fourth chapter, according to the explanation St. Paul has given of that passage in Gal. iv. Particular Churches are mentioned after the same manner. So, concerning the Church at Corinth,

St. Paul says, "I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ;" 2 Cor. xi. 2.

"Since then it is common for the Scriptures to represent the Church of God under the notion of a woman, and the Messiah under that of a husband; since the two bodies of men—that which worshipped God according to the Mosaic rites, and that which observed them not—are compared to two women; and since the circumstances of these two Churches are such as I have given an account of from St. Paul, it must be acknowledged that there is a lively resemblance between Solomon's espousing the Egyptian princess and the Messiah's admitting the Gentiles to equal privileges with the Jews, whether it was or was not designed by God as an emblem and type of it; celebrated by his prophets for this cause, in holy songs; and those songs preserved with care to this day among writings of the most sacred kind on that account."

This is the whole of Mr. Harmer's argument; see his Outlines, pages 74-77. And what is proved by it? Nothing, in reference to this book. We know that the Jewish people, not the Church exclusively, are represented under the notion of a woman afflicted, and a wife unfaithful, divorced, and forsaken, &c.; and that the Corinthians were represented under the notion of a chaste virgin espoused to Christ. And we know that all this was done to show, that as the marriage union was the closest, strictest, and most sacred among men, the union of the soul to God, and its connection with him, might be most fitly represented by that union, and unfaithfulness to him by infidelity in the other case. But what has this to do with the Canticles? Where is the intimation that Solomon represents Christ; Pharaoh's daughter, the Church of the Gentiles; and the Jewish queen, the Church of the Israelites? Nowhere. Why then assume the thing that should be proved; and then build doctrines on it, and draw inferences from it, as if the assumption had been demonstrated?

Were this mode of interpretation to be applied to the Scriptures in general, (and why not, if legitimate here?) in what a state would religion soon be! Who could see any thing certain, determinate, and fixed in the meaning of the Divine oracles, when fancy and imagination must be the standard interpreters? God has not left his word to man's will in this way.

Every attempt, however well-intentioned, to revive this thrifless, not to say dangerous, Origenian method of seducing the Scriptures to particular creeds and purposes, should be regarded with jealousy; and nothing received as the doctrine of the Lord but what may be derived from those plain words of the Most High which lie most on a level with the capacities of mankind. Allegory, metaphor, and figures in general, where the design is clearly indicated, which is the case with all those employed by the sacred writers, may come in to illustrate and more forcibly to apply Divine truth; but to extort celestial meanings from a whole book, where no such indication is given, is most certainly not the way to arrive at the knowledge of the true God, and of Jesus Christ whom he has sent.

As the Jewish marriages were celebrated for seven days, it has been often observed that this Song divides itself into seven periods, and describes the transactions of each.

I. The FIRST chapter represents the bridegroom and bride as a shepherd and shepherdess. The bride asks her spouse where he takes his flocks at noon, to preserve them from the excessive heat, lest she, in seeking him, should go astray into some strange pastures. After this day, the first night succeeds, which is pointed out chap. ii. 4, 5, 6. The bridegroom rises early in the morning, leaves the bride asleep, and goes hastily to the fields to his necessary occupations, ver. 7.

II. The SECOND night is pointed out chap. ii. 8, 9, &c. The bridegroom comes to the window of his spouse. She opens it, and he enters; and on the morrow, he returns to the fields to his flocks, ver. 17.

III. The THIRD night, the bridegroom having delayed his coming, the bride, being uneasy, arises from her bed, and goes out and inquires of the guards of the city, whether they had seen her beloved. She had not gone far from them till she met with him; she conducts him to her apartment, chap. iii. 1-4. Very early in the morning, he retires to the country, leaving the bride asleep, ver. 5. Afterwards she arises, and goes also to the fields, ver. 6.

INTRODUCTION TO THE SONG OF SOLOMON.

The fourth chapter is an eulogium on the bride's beauty; and seems to be a conversation between the parties in the country. She invites the bridegroom to visit her, chap. v. 1. He leaves his friends, with whom he was feasting, and comes to the door of his spouse, ver. 2. She hesitating to let him in, he withdraws and goes to his garden. The bride follows; but, not knowing whither he had retired, asks the guards of the city, by whom she is maltreated; thence goes to the daughters of Jerusalem, and inquires of them, ver. 3, &c. At last she meets with him, chap. vi. 1, &c., and having spent some time with him, returns.

IV. Chap. vi. 9, points out the fourth night of the marriage.

V. The fifth night is pointed out chap. vii. 1, &c. The bridegroom gives his bride nearly the same praise and commendations which he had received from her in the preceding chapters; and early in the morning they go out together to the fields, ver. 11-13.

VI. The sixth night they pass at a village in the country, at the house of a person who is termed the bride's mother, chap. vii. 13, viii. 1-3. She invites her spouse thither, and promises to regale him with excellent fruits and choice wine; and early in the morning the bridegroom arises, leaves the bride asleep as formerly, and retires to the country, chap. viii. 4.

VII. The seventh night is passed in the gardens. From chap. viii. 5, we have a series of dialogues between the bride and bridegroom. In the morning the bridegroom, having perceived that they were overheard, begs the bride to permit him to retire. She assents, ver. 13, 14, and exhorts him "to make haste, and be like a roe or a young hart on the mountains of spices."

This is the division, which is in the main most followed, especially by the best critics. But, besides this, several others have been proposed; and the reader, who wishes to enter more particularly into the subject, may consult Bishop Bossuet, Calmet, and Bishop Lowth. For my own part I doubt the propriety of this technical arrangement, and do not think that any thing of the kind was intended by the author. The division is not obvious; and therefore, in my apprehension, not natural. Of Dr. Good's division I shall speak below.

The dramatis personæ have been marked by some of the ancient interpreters, and the different portions of the whole Song appointed to several persons who are specified; and this division served for the basis of a commentary. The most regular division of this kind with which I have met is in a MS. of my own; the Bible which I have often quoted in my comment.

This, attributed by some to Wiclif, and by others to an older translator, I have carefully transcribed, with all the distinction of parts and speeches. The translation is very simple; and in many cases is much more faithful to the meaning of the Hebrew text, though in the main taken from the Vulgate, than our own version. It is a great curiosity, and certainly was never before printed; and is a fine specimen of our mother tongue as spoken in these countries in M.CCCLX., which may be about the date of this translation. On the common mode of interpretation I venture to assert that my readers will understand this Song ten times better from this translation and its rubrics, than they have ever done from all the forms in which it has been presented to them, to the present time. For this addition, I anticipate the thanks of every intelligent reader. The indications of the speakers, printed here in black letter, are all rubrick, in the beautiful original. I have added a short glossary on some of the more difficult or obsolete words, which will assist the less experienced reader, under whose notice such remote specimens of his own tongue seldom fall.

Between twenty and thirty years ago I received from India a part of the Gitagovinda, or Songs of Jayadeva. This poet, the finest lyric poet of India, flourished before the Christian era; and the poem above, which makes the tenth book of the Bhagavet, was written professedly to celebrate the loves of Chrishna and Radha, or the reciprocal attraction between the Divine goodness and the human soul. The author leaves us in no doubt concerning the design of this little pastoral drama; for in the conclusion he thus speaks: "Whatever is delightful in the modes of music, whatever is DIVINE in MEDITATIONS on VISHNU, whatever is exquisite in the sweet art of love, whatever is graceful in the fine strains of poetry; all that, let the happy and wise learn from the Songs of Jayadeva, whose soul is united with the foot of Narayan." Vishnu and Narayan are epithets of Chrishna, or the supreme incarnated god of the Hindoos. I found the general phraseology of this work, and its imagery as well as its subject, to correspond so much with those of the Canticles, that in the short notes which I wrote on this book in 1798, I proposed the illustration of many of its passages from the Gitagovinda; and was pleased to find, several years after, that my view of the subject had been confirmed by that encyclopædia of learning and science, Dr. Mason Good, who in his translation of the Song of Songs, with critical notes, published 1803, 8vo., has illustrated many passages from the Gitagovinda.

After having made a selection from this ancient poet for the illustration of the Canticles, I changed in some measure my purpose, and determined to give the whole work, and leave it to my readers to apply those passages which they might think best calculated to throw light upon a book which professedly has the wisest of men for its author, and, according to the opinion of many, the most important doctrines of the Christian religion for its subject. I have not followed the metrical version which I received from India, but rather the prose translation of Sir William Jones; dividing it into parts and verses, after the model of the metrical version above mentioned; and adding verbal interpretations of the principal proper names and difficult terms which are contained in the work.

Having been long convinced that the Chaldee Targum is at once the oldest and most valuable comment upon this book, I have also added this. And here I might say that I have not only followed my own judgment, but that also of a very learned divine, Dr. John Gill, who, having preached one hundred and twenty-two sermons on the Song of Solomon, to the Baptist congregation at Horsleydown, near London, embodied them all in what he calls "An Exposition" of this book; to which he added a translation of the Targum, with short explanatory notes, folio, 1728. This was, however, suppressed in all the later editions of his exposition; but why, I cannot tell. This piece I give to my readers, and for the same reasons alleged by this very learned and excellent man himself:—

"At the end of this exposition I have given," says he, "a version of the Targum or Chaldee paraphrase upon the whole book, with some notes thereon, induced hereunto by the following reasons:

"First, to gratify the curiosity of some who, observing frequent mention and use made of it in my exposition, might be desirous of perusing the whole.

"Secondly, for the profitableness thereof. Our learned countryman, Mr. Broughton, says, this paraphrase is worth our study both for delight and profit. It expounds several passages of Scripture, and some in the New Testament, which I have directed to in my notes upon it; and I am persuaded that the writings of the Jews, the ancient Jews especially, would give us much light into the phraseology and sense of abundance of texts in the New Testament."

It is certain that this paraphrase does very often direct us, or at least confirm us, as to the persons speaking in this Song, to know which is of very great use in the explication of it. I shall add another reason: I believe the book of Canticles refers more to the Jewish than to the Christian Church, and I think the Targumist has made a more rational use of it than any of his successors.

I have thus placed within the reach of all my readers THREE especial helps towards a good understanding of this book: 1. The ancient English translation, with its curious dramatis personæ. 2. The Gitagovinda, a most curious poem of the spiritual and allegorical kind. 3. The Chaldee Targum, the oldest comment on this Song. And I add my prayer, May God guide the reader into all truth, through Christ Jesus! Amen.

On this part of the subject it would be almost criminal not to mention, still more particularly, Dr. Mason Good's translation and notes on the Song of Songs. He has done much to elucidate its phraseology, and his notes are a treasury of critical learning. He considers the book to be a collection of Sacred Idyls, twelve in number; and his division is as follows:

| Royal Bride,  | — 14.                |

There have been various opinions on this division; and many will still think that much remains yet to be done. Dr. Good considers it a spiritual allegory; but he does not attempt a spiritual application of any part of it. This perhaps is no mean proof of his good sense and judgment. I have acted in the same way, though not so convinced of its spirituality as Dr. Good appears to be. If I took it up in this way, I should explain it according to my own creed, as others have done according to theirs; and could I lay it down as a maxim, that it is to be spiritually interpreted in reference to the Christian Revelation, I might soon show my reader that it points out the infinite love of God to every human soul, in the incarnation of Christ; the means he uses to bring all mankind to an acquaintance with him; and the redemption of true believers from all unrighteousness, through the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit; their consequent holy life, and godly conversation; the calling of the Gentiles; the restoration of the Jews; and the final judgment! And my comment on this plan would have just as solid a foundation as those of my predecessors, from Origen to the present day.

To conclude: I advise all young ministers to avoid preaching on Solomon's Song. If they take a text out of it, to proclaim salvation to lost sinners, they must borrow their doctrines from other portions of Scripture, where all is plain and pointed. And why then leave such, and go out of their way to find allegorical meanings, taking a whole book by storm, and leaving the word of God to serve tables?

It is curious to see the manner in which many preachers and commentators attempt to expound this book. They first assume that the book refers to Christ and his Church; his union with human nature; his adoption of the Gentiles; and his everlasting love to elect souls, gathered out of both people; then take the words bride, bridegroom, spouse, love, watchmen, shepherds, tents, door, lock, &c., &c., and, finding some words either similar or parallel, in other parts of the sacred writings, which have there an allegorical meaning, contend that those here are to be similarly understood; and what is spoken of those apply to these; and thus, in fact, are explaining other passages of Scripture in their own way, while professing to explain the Canticles! What eminent talents, precious time, great pains, and industry, have been wasted in this way! One eminent scholar preaches to his congregation one hundred and twenty-two sermons upon the Song of Solomon, while all this time the evangelists and apostles have been comparatively forgotten; except only as they are referred to in illustration of the particular creed which such writers and preachers found on this book. How can they account to God for so much time spent on a tract which requires all their ingenuity and skill to make edifying, even on their own plan; a text of which they are not permitted to allege, in controversy, to prove the truth of any disputed doctrine? This, however, is not the fault of any particular class of ministers exclusively; several of all classes, though of some more than of others, have been found, less or more, labouring at this thriftless craft. Some, having preached on it during the whole of their ministry, have carried it, in a certain way, beyond the grave. An aged minister once told me, in a very solemn manner, that as God had been exceedingly merciful to him in saving his soul, and putting him into the ministry, thus accounting him faithful, he hoped that, when called to the Church above, if any funeral sermon were preached for him, it should be from Canticles, chap. i. 8: "Go thy way forth by the footsteps of the flock, and feed thy kids beside the shepherds' tents." That he could have applied these words to his own state, and the use which should be made of his life and death, I have no doubt; but who, from this text, would have chosen to pronounce the funeral oration?

I repeat it, and I wish to be heard by young ministers in particular, take the plainest texts when you attempt to convince men of sin, and build up believers on their most holy faith; and thus show rather your love for their souls than your dexterity in finding out spiritual meanings for obscure passages, on the true signification of which few, either among the learned or pious, are agreed.

I now, according to my promise, lay before my readers a transcript from my own MS. Bible, which is most probably the first translation of this Song that was ever made into the English language. I have added, for the sake of reference, the figures for the present division into verses, in the margin: these are not in the MS. The dramatis personæ, here in black letter, are in red in the MS. The orthography is scrupulously followed.

THE BOOK OF CANTICLES.

[Carefully transcribed from a MS. of the fourteenth century in the Editor's possession.]

Here begynneth the Boke that is clepid Songis of Songis, of the Bedaulis of Crist and of the Chirche.

CAP. I.

The Chirche of the comynge of Crist, spekith seyfinge,

2. Kysse he me with the cosse of his mouth.

The voise of the Fadir.

For better ben thi tetis thann wyn, smelling with best oynmentis.

The voise of the Chirche.

3. Oyle held oute thi name: ther fore the yunge waxinge wymmen loviden thee ful myche.

The voise of the Chirche to Crist.

4. Drawe me after thee: we schul rennen in the smell of thin oynmentis.

The Chirche seyth of Crist.

Brogte me in the king into his celers. We schul ful out joyen and gladen in thee, myndful of thi tetis upon wyn, rightmen loven thee.

The Chirche, of hie tribulaciouns.

5. O zee dogtris of Jerusalem, blac I am but schappli, as the tabernaculis of eedar, as the skynnes of Salomon. Willith not beholden that I be broun; for discolord me hath the sunne.
The sones of my modir fogten agein me: thei setiden me keper in vynes: my vyne gerde I kepte not.

The voise of the Chirche to Crist.

7. Schewe thou to me whom lovith my soule, where thou gevest leswe, where thou lygge in myd day: lest to gou vagraunt I begynne afir the flockis of thi felawes.

The voise of Crist to the Chirche.

8. Gif thou knowest not thee, O thou fair most among wymmen; go oute, and go aweil after the steppis of thi flockis and feed thi goot beside
9. the tabernaculis of schepperdis. To my ryding in charis of Pharao, I liened thee, O my leef!
10. Fair ben thy cheekis as of a turture; thi necke

11. as brochis. Golden ribanes we schul maken to thee maad furrede with sylvir.

The voise of the Chirche, of Crist.

12. Whan the king was in his lying place, my maad 13. encense gave his smell. A bundlet of mirre my lemman is to me: between my tetis he schal
14. dwellen. The cluster of eypre tree my lemman to me: in the vynes of Engaddy.

The voise of Crist to the Chirche.

15. Loo thou art fair my leef, loo thou fair: thin eegen of culveris.

The voise of the Chirche to Crist.

16. Loo thou art fair my lemman, and seemli; our bed is schynynge. The trees of oure hous as cedre; oure couplis eyprese.

CAP. II.

The voise of Crist, of him and of the Chirche.

- 1, 2. I the floure of the feeld, and the lilie of al valeys, as a lilie among thornes, so my leef among dogtris.

The voise of the Chirche, of Crist.

3. As an apple tree among the trees of wedis; so my lemman among sones. Undir the schadewe of him whom I hadde desirede, I satte: and his
4. fruyte sweet to my throote. The king ladde me into his wyne celere, he ordeynede in me
5. charite. Undir leye gee me with floures, settith me about applis; for I languych for love.

The voise of the Chirche, of Crist.

6. The left hond of him undir myn heued; and his right hend schal clippen me.

The voise of Crist, of the Chirche

7. I adjure gou, gee dogtris of Jerusalem, by the capretis and the hertis of feeldis, ne rere gee, ne makith my leef to waken, to the time that sche wille.

The voise of the Chirche, of Crist.

8. The voies of my lemman: Loo, this comith lepinge in mounteynes, and over lepinge hilles.

CANTICLES.

9. Liic is my lemman to an capret and to an hert, calf of hertis. Loo, he stant behinden our wall beholding by the wyndowis a fer loking thurg the latises. Loo my lemman spekith to me :
10. Riis go thou my leef, my culver my schappli
11. and cum. Now forsothe wynter passide, wedir
12. geed fro, and is gon awei. Floures appeereden in our lond—tyme of cutting is cummen ; the
13. voice of the turtur is herd in oure londe. The fige tree brogt forth his first figs : The vynes flouryng geven their smell.

The voice of Crist to the Chirche.

14. Riis, go my leef, my schaply and cum thou my culver, in the hoolis of the stoon wal. Schewe thou to me thi face, and soun thi voice in my eris ; thi voice forsoth is sweet, and thi face seemli.

The voice of Crist to the Chirche agein heretiks.

15. Take gee to us litil foxis that destruyen vynes : for oure vyne flourede.

The voice of the Chirche, of Crist.

16. My loved to me, and I to him, that is fed among lilies, to the tyme that the day springe, and
17. schadewis ben bowed in. Turne agein ; liic be thou O my lemman to a capret, and to the hert, calf of hertis, upon the mounteynes of Bether.

CAP. III.

The voice of the Chirche gedred toggyder of Gentilis.

1. In my litil bed by nigthis, I sougt whom lovede
2. my soule : I sogte him, and I founde not. I schal riisen and gon aboute the cytee, by townes and streetis : I schal sechen whom loveth my
3. soule. I sogt him and found not. There founden me the wacheris that kepen the cytee.

The Chirche seith of Crist, to the Apostlis.

Wheyther whom loveth my soule, gee seegen ?

4. A litil whan I hadde passid hem, I foond whom lovith my soule ; I heeld him and I schal not leven to the tyme that I bringe him into the hous of my moder : and into the bed of hir that gat me.

The voice of Crist, of the Chirche.

5. I adjure gou ge dogtris of Jerusalem, hy capretis and hertis of feeldis, ne reire gee, ne make gee my leef to waken to the tyme that sche wille.

The Synagoge, of the Chirche.

6. What is sche this that stiegeth up by desert, as a litil gerde of smoke of the swote spyces of mirre and of cense, and of al pymentarie poudre ?

The voice of the Chirche, of Crist.

7. Loo the litil bed of Salomon ; sixti stronge men compassen, of the most strong men of Israel ;

8. the whiche alle ben holdinge swerdis ; and to bataille best tagt. Of eche oon the swerd upon his hip, for the nigt dredis.

Of Crist, and of the Chirche chosen of Gentilis.

9. A chaier King Salomon maad to him of the trees of Liban. His pileers, he maade sylveren ; the lenying place, golden ; the steiging up, purple ; the myddis he enournede with charite, for the dogteris of Jerusalem.

The voice of the Chirche, of Crist.

11. Goth out and seeth gee dogtris of Syon, Kyng Salomon, in the dyademe in the whiche crowned him his modir, in the dai of spousing of him ; and in the dai of gladnesse of his herte

CAP. IV.

The voice of Crist to the Chirche.

1. How fair art thou my leef, hou fair ert thou ! Thyn eegen of culveris, with out it that with ine forth is hid. Thin heris as the flockis of Got, that steigiden up fro the hill of Galaad.
2. Thi teeth as the flockis of clippid scheep that steigeden up fro the wasching place. Alle with double lombis in the wombe ; and bareyn is not there among hem. Als a furrede sylken fylet, thi lippis, and thy fair speche swote. Als the brekyng of a powmgarnet, so thy cheekis ;
3. without it, that withine forth litt hid. Als the tour of David thi neck that is bild out with pynaclis. A thousand scheeldis hangen of it al the armour of strong men. Thi two tetis as two yunge capretis twynglingis of the capret, that
4. ben fed in lilies : to the tyme that the day brethe out, and the schadewis ben in bowid. I schal gou to the mount of mirre, and to the hill of cens.
5. Al fair thou art my leef, and wemm is not in thee. Cum thou fro Libane my spouse, cumm fro Liban ; cum thou schalt ben crowned fro the heued of Amana ; fro the frount of Sannir, and of Ermon : fro the couchis lions, and the hill of Paradise. Thou hast woundid myn herte myn suster, my spouse, thou hast woundide myn herte in oon of thin eegen : and
6. in oon here of thi neck. Hou fair ben thi tetis my suster, my spouse, fairer ben thi tetis than wyne : and the smell of thin oynmentis, over alle spices. A dropping honeycomb thy lippis, spouse : honey and mylc undir thi tunge ; and the smell of thi clothing is, as the smell of cens.
7. A closid garden my suster, spouse ; a closid gardyn, a welle selid. Thin out sendingis is paradis of paumgarnetis : with thi fruytis of applis. Of cypre tree with narde ; and narde with safrun, and fystula and canel, with alle the trees of Liban, mirre and aloes, with alle the first oynmentis. The welle of gardynes, the pit of lyvyng wateris that flowen with burre fro Liban. Riis North, and cum South, blow thurg my gardyn, and thei schul flowen swote spyces of it.

CAP. V.

The Chirche sefth of Crfst.

1. Cum my leef into his gardyn; and ete he the fruyt of his applis.

Crfst sefth to the Chirche.

Cum into my gardyn, my sister, my spouse; I have gadered my mirre with my swote spices; I eete myn hony comb with myn hony. I dranke my wyne with my myle.

Crfst to the Apostolls sefth.

2. Etith gee freendis and drinkith: and gee most derwerth beth inwardli maad drunken. I sleep and myn herte wakith.

The voise of the Chirche, of Crfst.

The voise of my Lemman kneckyng, open thou to me my sustir, my leef, my culver, my unweimynd, for my heud is ful of dewe, and

3. my temple heris of the droopis of nigtis. I spoylide me my coote; hou schal I be clethid it? I waschide my feet, hou schal I besoulen
4. hem? my lemman putte his hond bi the hool; my wombe inwardly trembled at the touching of
5. him. I rose that I scholde opennen to my lemman. My hondis droppiden mirre; and my
6. fingris ful of best proved mirre. The lacche of my dore, I opened to my lemman; and he hadde bowid asyde and passide. My soule is moltyn as my lemman spac. I sogte and founde not him. I elcpid and he answerd not to me.
7. There founden me keperis that gen about the eytee. Thei smyten me, and woundiden me;
8. takin my mantill the keperis of the wallis. I adjure gou ye dogtris of Jerusalem, gif gee schul fynden my lemman, that gee telle to him, for I languish for love.

The voise of freendis sefth to the Chirche.

9. Whiche is thy lemman of the loved, O thou most fair of wymmen? Whiche is thy lemman of the loved? Forsoth thou hast adjured us.

The voise of the Chirche of Crfst sefth to the freendis.

10. My lemman whiit and roodi chosen of thou-
11. sandis. His heued, best geld; his her as bunchis
12. of palmys, thick leved blac as a crowe. His eegen as culveris upon litil ryvers. Of wateris that ben waschid with mylk; and sitte by the
13. most full flowing of wateris. The cheekis of litil flouris of swote spices plaunted of pimentaries. His lippis dropping the first myrre; the

10. What is seche this that goth ferth as the morew-tide, rising fair as the mone, chosen as the sunne; ferful as of tentis seheltrun ordeyned.

The voise of the Chirche, of the Synagoge.

11. I wente down into my gardyne that I schulde seen the applis of valeys; and beholden gif the vynes hadden flouride, and the poumgarnetis
12. hadden burriouned, I wiste not, my soule distourbid me, for the foure horsid cartis of Amynadab.

The voise of the Chirche to the faith of the Natbytye.

13. Turne agein, turne agein Sunamytis; turne agein, turne agein that we beholden thee.

The voise of Crfst to the Chirche, of the Synagoge.

What schalt thou seen in the Sunamyte, but queeris of tentis?

CAP. VII.

The voise of Crfst to the Chirche.

1. Hou fair ben thi goingis in schoon, thou dogtir of the prince? the jointures of thin hippis as broochis that ben forgid with hond of the craftisman. Thin navel a turned cuppe, never needing drinkis. Thi wombe as an hepe of whete,

The boice of the Synagoge, of the Chirche.

5. What is sche this that steigith up fro desert, flowing delicies, fast cleuyng upon hir leef?

The boice of Crist to the Synagoge, of the holi Crosse.

Undir an apple tree I rered thee; there schent is thi modir: there defoulid is sche that gat thee.

6. Putte me as a brooche upon thi herte; putte me as a brooche upon thin arme; for strong as deth, love: hard as helle, gelousnesse: the lampis of
7. it, the lampis of fir: and of flammes. Many wateris schal not mown quenchen oute charitee: ne floodis schal not throwen it down. Gif a man gif al the substaunce of his hous for love, as nogt he dispisith it.

The boice of Crist, to the lnyage of holi Chirche.

8. Our sustir a litil child; and tetis sche hath not. What schal we done to oure sustir, in the day
9. whann sche is to be spoken to? Gif a wal she is, biden we upon it sylveren pynnaclis. Gif a dore sche is, joyn we it with cedre tables

The boice of the Chirche, answeringe.

10. I, a wal; and my tetis as a tour; sythen I am maad be fore thee as pese receyvynge.

The Synagoge, of the Chirche seyth.

11. Vyne sche was to pesyble, in hir that hath peplis; sche toke it to the keperis: a man takith awei for the fruyte of it, a thousand sylveren platis.

Crist to the Chirche seyth.

12. My vyne before me is; a thousand thi pesiblis, and two hundrith to hem that kepen the fruytis of it. The whiche dwellest in gardynes freendis herkenen thee: make me to heeren thi voice.

The boice of the Chirche to Crist.

14. Flee thou my leef, be thou likened to a capret. and to an hert, calf of hertis, upon the moun- tynes of swote spices.

THE SONG OF SOLOMON.

Year from the Creation of the World, according to Archbishop Usher, 2990.—Year from the Flood of Noah, according to the common Hebrew text, 1334.—Year before the birth of Christ, 1010.—Year before the vulgar era of Christ's nativity, 1014.

CHAPTER I.

The bride's love to her spouse, 1-5. She confesses her unworthiness; desires to be directed to the flock, 6, 7; and she is directed to the shepherds' tents, 8. The bridegroom describes his bride, and shows how he will provide for her, and how comfortably they are accommodated, 9-17.

NOTES ON CHAP. I.

Verse 1. The song of songs] A song of peculiar excellence. See the Introduction. The rabbins consider this superior to all songs. TEN songs, says the Targum, have been sung; but this excels them all. 1. The first was sung by Adam when his sin was pardoned. 2. The second was sung by Moses and the Israelites at the Red Sea. 3. The third was sung by the Israelites when they drank of the rock in the wilderness. 4. The fourth was sung by Moses when summoned to depart from this world. 5. The fifth was sung by Joshua when the sun and moon stood still. 6. The sixth was sung by Deborah and Barak after the defeat of Siscra. 7. The seventh was sung by Hannah when the Lord promised her a son. 8. The eighth was sung by David for all the mercies given him by God. 9. The ninth is the present, sung in the spirit of prophecy by Solomon. 10. The tenth is that which shall be sung by the children of Israel when restored from their captivities. See the Targum.

Verse 2. Let him kiss me, &c.] She speaks of the bridegroom in the third person, to testify her own modesty, and to show him the greater respect.

Thy love is better than wine.] The versions in general translate דודצא, thy breasts; and they are said to represent, spiritually, the Old and New Testaments.

4 Draw me, <sup>e</sup> we will run after thee: the king <sup>f</sup> hath brought me into his chambers: we will be glad and rejoice in thee, we will remember thy love more than wine: <sup>g</sup> the upright love thee.

5 I am black, but comely, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, as the tents of Ke-

Verse 3. Thy name is as ointment poured forth] Ointments and perfumes were, and still are, in great request among the Asiatics. They occur constantly in their entertainments. Thy name is as refreshing to my heart, as the best perfumes diffused through a chamber are to the senses of the guests.

Therefore do the virgins love thee.] She means herself; but uses this periphrasis through modesty.

Verse 4. Draw me] Let me have the full assurance of thy affection.

We will run after thee] Speaking in the plural through modesty, while still herself is meant.

The king hath brought me] My spouse is a patentate, a mighty king, no ordinary person.

Into his chambers] He has favoured me with his utmost confidence.

The upright love thee.] The most perfect and accomplished find thee worthy of their highest esteem.

Verse 5. I am black, but comely] This is literally true of many of the Asiatic women; though black or brown, they are exquisitely beautiful. Many of the Egyptian women are still fine; but their complexion is much inferior to that of the Palestine females. Though black or swarthy in my complexion, yet am I comely—well proportioned in every part.

As the tents of Kedar] I am tawny, like the tents of the Arabians, and like the pavilions of Solomon, 261. I am black, because the sun hath looked upon me : my mother's children were angry with me ; they made me keeper of the vineyards ; but mine own vineyard have I not kept.

7 Tell me, O thou whom my soul loveth, where thou feedest, where thou makest thy flock to rest at noon : for why should I be as probably covered by a kind of tanned cloth. The daughters of Jerusalem are said to represent the synagogue ; the bride, the Church of Christ. It is easy to find spiritual meanings : every creed will furnish them.

Verse 6. Because the sun hath looked upon me] The bride gives here certain reasons why she was dark complexioned. "The sun hath looked upon me." I am sunburnt, tanned by the sun ; being obliged, perhaps, through some domestic jealousy or uneasiness, to keep much without : "My mother's children were angry ; they made me keeper of the vineyards." Here the brown complexion of the Egyptians is attributed to the influence of the sun or climate.

My mother's children were angry with me] Acted severely. The bringing of a foreigner to the throne would no doubt excite jealousy among the Jewish females ; who, from their own superior complexion, national and religious advantages, might well suppose that Solomon should not have gone to Egypt for a wife and queen, while Judea could have furnished him with every kind of superior excellence.

Verse 7. Tell me—where thou feedest] This is spoken as if the parties were shepherds, or employed in the pastoral life. But how this would apply either to Solomon, or the princess of Egypt, is not easy to ascertain. Probably in the marriage festival there was something like our masks, in which persons of quality assumed rural characters and their employments. See that fine one composed by Milton, called Comus.

To rest at noon] In hot countries the shepherds and their flocks are obliged to retire to shelter during the burning heats of the noonday sun. This is common in all countries, in the summer heats, where shelter can be had.

One that turneth aside] As a wanderer ; one who, not knowing where to find her companions, wanders fruitlessly in seeking them. It was customary for shepherds to drive their flocks together for the purpose of conversing, playing on the pipe, or having trials of skill in poetry or music. So VIRGIL :—

Fortē sub arguta consederat ilice Daphnis Compulerantque greges Corydon et Thyrsis in unum :
Thyrsis oves, Corydon distentas lætæ capellas ;
Ambo florentes ætatis, Arcades ambo,
Et cantare parces, et respondere parati.—ECL. vii. v. 1.

8 If thou know not, O thou fairest among women, go thy way forth by the footsteps of the flock, and feed thy kids beside the shepherds' tents.

9 I have compared thee, O my love, to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots.

10 Thy cheeks are comely with rows of jewels, thy neck with chains of gold.

<sup>12</sup> Chronicles i. 16, 17.—<sup>m</sup> Ezekiel xvi. 11, 12, 13.

"Beneath a holm repair'd two jolly swains :
Their sheep and goats together grazed the plains ;
Both young Arcadians, both alike inspired
To sing and answer as the song required."—DRYDEN.

This does not express the sense of the original : from the different pastures in which they had been accustomed to feed their flocks, they drove their sheep and goats together for the purpose mentioned in the pastoral ; and, in course, returned to their respective pasturages, when their business was over.

Verse 8. If thou know not] This appears to be the reply of the virgins. They know not exactly ; and therefore direct the bride to the shepherds, who would give information.

Verse 9. I have compared thee—to a company of horses] This may be translated, more literally, "I have compared thee לסוסתי lesusathi, to my mare, in the chariots or courses of Pharaoh ;" and so the versions understood it. Mares, in preference to horses, were used both for riding and for chariots in the East. They are much swifter, endure more hardship, and will go longer without food, than either the stallion or the gelding. There is perhaps no brute creature in the world so beautiful as a fine well-bred horse or mare ; and the finest woman in the universe, Helen, has been compared to a horse in a Thessalian chariot, by Theocritus. Idyl. xviii. ver. 28 :—

Ὡδε καὶ ἡ χρυσέα Ἑλένα διαφαίνεται ἐν ἡμῖν, Πιερῇ, μεγάλῃ, ἅτ' ἀνεδράμεν ὄμιος ἀροῦρα,
Ἡ καπῷ κυνarisσος, ἡ ἄρματι Θεσσαλὸς ἵππος.

"The golden Helen, tall and graceful, appears as distinguished among us as the furrow in the field, the cypress in the garden, or the Thessalian horse in the chariot."

This passage amply justifies the Hebrew bard, in the simile before us. See Jer. vi. 2.

Verse 10. Thy cheeks are comely] D'Arvieux has remarked that "the Arabian ladies wear a great many pearls about their necks and caps. They have gold chains about their necks which hang down upon their bosoms with strings of coloured gauze ; the gauze itself bordered with zechms and other pieces of gold coin, which hang upon their foreheads and both cheeks. The ordinary women wear small silver coins, with which they cover their forehead-piece like fish scales, as this is one of the principal ornaments of their faces." I have seen their essence bottles ornamented with festoons of aspers, and small pieces of silver pearls, beads, &c. One of these is now before me.

Verse 11. Borders of gold] I have observed several of the handkerchiefs, shawls, and head attire of the Eastern women, curiously and expensively worked in the borders with gold and silver, and variously coloured silk, which has a splendid effect.

Verse 12. While the king sitteth at his table] במסבו bimsibbo, in his circle, probably meaning the circle of his friends at the marriage festivals, or a round table.

Verse 13. He shall lie all night betwixt my breasts.] Mr. Harmer contends that it is the bundle of myrrh which the bride says shall lie all night betwixt her breasts, to which she compares the bridegroom, his name being as pleasing and refreshing to her mind, as the myrrh or stacte was to her senses, by its continual fragrance.

Verse 14. A cluster of camphire] Mr. Hasselquist supposes this to mean a bunch of the Cyprus grape; but this is supposed to mean a shrub so called, not any production of the isle of Cyprus; the best kinds of which were found at En-gedi. This place belonged to the tribe of Judah.

Perhaps the poet alludes to the dark colour of the hair, which by the Greeks was not unfrequently compared to the bunches of grapes; by no means an unfit

أنثيث كفن اللخلة اطعتنكل

"The dark black locks that ornament her neck

Hang thick and clustering like the branchy palm."

Verse 15. Thou hast doves' eyes] The large and beautiful dove of Syria is supposed to be here referred to, the eyes of which are remarkably fine.

Verse 16. Also our bed is green.] ערש eres, from its use in several places of the Hebrew Bible, generally signifies a mattress; and here probably a green bank is meant, on which they sat down, being now on a walk in the country. Or it may mean a bower in a garden, or the nuptial bed.

Verse 17. The beams of our house are cedar] Perhaps it was under a cedar tree, whose vast limbs were interwoven with the ברית beroth, a tree of the cypress kind, where they now sat. And this natural bower recommended itself to the poet's attention by its strength, loftiness, and its affording them a shady cover and cool retreat. How natural to break out into the praise of a bower, by whose branches and foliage we are shielded from the intense heat of the sun!
Even the shelter of a great rock in a weary land is celebrated by the pen of the first of prophets and greatest of poets, Isa. xxxii. 2.

With this chapter the first day of the marriage ceremonies is supposed to end.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

Verse 1. I am the rose of Sharon] Sharon was a very fruitful place, where David's cattle were fed, 1 Chron. xxvii. 29. It is mentioned as a place of excellence, Isa. xxxv. 2, and as a place of flocks, Isa.
lxv. 10. Perhaps it would be better, with almost all the versions, to translate, "I am the rose of the field." The bridegroom had just before called her fair; she, with a becoming modesty, represents her beauty as nothing extraordinary, and compares herself to a common flower of the field. This, in the warmth of his affection, he denies, insisting that she as much surpasses all other maidens as the flower of the lily does the bramble, ver. 2.

Verse 3. As the apple tree] The bride returns the compliment, and says, As the apple or citron tree is among the trees of the wood, so is the bridegroom among all other men.

I sat down under his shadow] I am become his spouse, and my union with him makes me indescribably happy.

Verse 4. He brought me to the banqueting house] Literally, the house of wine. The ancients preserved their wine, not in barrels or dark cellars under ground, as we do, but in large pitchers, ranged against the wall in some upper apartment in the house, the place where they kept their most precious effects. We have a proof of this in HOMER:—

Ως φαν' ὁ δ' ὑψοφόρον θαλαμον κατεβησάτο πατρός
Εὐρυν, ὅθι νητός χρυσεός καὶ χαλκός εἰκείτο,

There, polished chests embroider'd vestures graced.
Here, pots of oil breathed forth a rich perfume;
There, jars of wine in rows adorn'd the dome.

Verse 5. Stay me with flagons] I believe the original words mean some kind of cordials with which we are unacquainted. The versions in general understand some kind of ointment or perfumes by the first term.
I suppose the good man was perfectly sincere who took this for his text, and, after having repeated, Stay me with flagons, comfort me with apples, for I am sick

looketh forth at the windows, <sup>k</sup> showing himself through the lattice.

of love sat down, perfectly overwhelmed with his own feelings, and was not able to proceed! But while we admit such a person's sincerity, who can help questioning his judgment?

Verse 7. I charge you—by the roes] This was probably some rustic mode of adjuration. The verses themselves require little comment.

With this verse the first night of the first day is supposed to end.

Verse 8. Behold, he cometh leaping] This appears to be highly characteristic of the gambols of the shepherds, and points out the ecstasy with which those who were enamoured ran to their mates. It is supposed that the second day's eclogue begins at this verse.
The author of what was then called A New Translation of Solomon's Song, observes, 1. The bride relates how the bridegroom, attended by his companions, had come under her window, and called upon her to come forth and enjoy the beauties of the spring, ver. 9, 10, 11, &c. 2. She then returns to her narration, chap.
iii. 1. The bridegroom did not come according to her wishes. Night came on; she did not find him in her bed; she went out to seek him; found him, and brought him to her mother's pavilion, ver. 4; and then, as before, conjures the virgins not to disturb his repose, ver. 5.

Verse 9. He standeth behind our wall] This may refer to the wall by which the house was surrounded, the space between which and the house constituted the court.
He was seen first behind the wall, and then in the court;
and lastly came to the window of his bride's chamber.

Verse 11. The winter is past] Mr. Harmer has made some good collections on this part, from Drs.
Shaw and Russel, which I shall transcribe. One part of the winter is distinguished from the rest of it by the people of the East, on account of the severity of the cold. At Aleppo it lasts about forty days, and is called by the natives maurbanie. I would propose it to the consideration of the learned, whether the word here used, and translated winter, may not be understood to mean what the Aleppines express by the term maurbanie. It occurs nowhere else in the Old Testament; and another word is used for the rainy part of the year in general. If this thought be admitted, it will greatly illustrate the words of the bridegroom:
Lo, the winter is past; the rain is over, and gone.

A. M. cir. 2990. 12 The flowers appear on the
B. C. cir. 1014. earth; the time of the singing Ante I. Olymp. of birds is come, and the voice cir. 238. of the turtle is heard in our land;
Ante U. C. cir. 261.

13 The fig tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grape give a good smell. <sup>m</sup> Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away.

14 O my dove, that art in the clefts of the rock, in the secret places of the stairs, let me see thy countenance, <sup>n</sup> let me hear thy voice;

For then the last clause will not be explanatory of the first, and signify that the moist part of the year was entirely past; with which, Dr. Russel assures us, all pleasantness withdraws at Aleppo; but the words will import: "The maurbanie is past and over; the weather is become agreeably warm; the rain too is just ceased, and consequently hath left us the prospect of several days of serenity and undisturbed pleasantness."

The weather of Judea was in this respect, I presume, like that at Algiers; where, after two or three days of rain, there is usually, according to Dr. Shaw, "a week, a fortnight, or more, of fair and good weather. Of such a sort of cessation of rain alone, the bridegroom, methinks, is here to be understood; not of the absolute termination of the rainy season, and the summer droughts being come on. And if so, what can the time that is past mean but the maurbanie? Indeed, Dr. Russel, in giving us an account of the excursions of the English merchants at Aleppo, has undesignedly furnished us with a good comment on this and the two following verses. These gentlemen, it seems, dine abroad under a tent, in spring and autumn on Saturdays, and often on Wednesdays. They do the same during the good weather in winter; but they live at the gardens in April, and part of May. In the heat of the summer they dine at the gardens, as once or twice a week they dine under a tent in autumn and spring." The cold weather is not supposed by Solomon to have been long over, since it is distinctly mentioned; and the Aleppines make these incursions very early; the narcissus flowers during the whole of the maurbanie; the hyacinths and violets at least before it is quite over. The appearing of flowers, then, doth not mean the appearing of the first and earliest flowers, but must rather be understood of the earth's being covered with them; which at Aleppo is not till after the middle of February, a small crane's bill appearing on the banks of the river there about the middle of February, quickly after which comes a profusion of flowers. The nightingales, too, which are there in abundance, not only afford much pleasure by their songs in the gardens, but are also kept tame in the houses, and let out at a small rate to divert such as choose it in the city; so that no entertainments are made in the spring without a concert of these birds. No wonder, then, that Solomon makes the bridegroom speak of the singing of birds: and it for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely.

15 Take us <sup>o</sup> the foxes, the little foxes, that spoil the vines: for our vines have tender grapes.

16 <sup>p</sup> My beloved is mine, and I am his: he feedeth among the lilies.

17 <sup>q</sup> Until the day break, and the shadows flee away, turn, my beloved, and be thou <sup>r</sup> like a roe or a young hart upon the mountains <sup>s</sup> of Bether.

teaches us what these birds are, which are expressly distinguished from turtle doves.

Verse 13. The fig tree putteth forth her green figs] The fig tree in Judea bears double crops; the first of which is ripe in spring. But the tree, as I have elsewhere observed, bears figs all the year through, in the climes congenial to it. That is, the fig tree has always ripe or unripe fruit on it. I never saw a healthy tree naked. But in the beginning of spring they grow fast, and become turgid.

The vines with the tender grape] The versions understand this of the flowers of the vine. These were formerly put into the new wine (2 lbs. to every eask) to give it a fine flavour.

Verse 14. My dove—in the clefts of the rock] He compares his bride hiding herself in her secret chambers and closets to a dove in the clefts of the rock.

Verse 15. Take us the foxes] That these were ruinous to vines all authors allow. They love the vine, and they are eaten in autumn in some countries, according to Galen, when they are very fat with eating the grapes. They abounded in Judea; and did most damage when the clusters were young and tender. It is likely that these are the words of the bridegroom to his companions, just as he was entering the apartment of his spouse. "Take care of the vineyard: set the traps for the foxes, which are spoiling the vines; and destroy their young as far as possible."

Verse 16. My beloved is mine] The words of the bride on his entering: "I am thy own; thou art wholly mine."

He feedeth among the lilies.] The odour with which he is surrounded is as fine as if he passed the night among the sweetest scented flowers.

Verse 17. Until the day break] Literally, until the day breathe; until the first dawn, which is usually accompanied with the most refreshing breezes.

The shadows flee away] Referring to the evening or setting of the sun, at which all shadows vanish.

The mountains of Bether.] Translated also mountains of division, supposed to mean the mountains of Beth-horon.

There was a place called Bithron, 2 Sam. ii. 29, on the other side of Jordan; and as the name signifies PARTITION, it might have had its name from the circumstance of its being divided or separated from Judea by the river Jordan.

With this chapter the second night is supposed to end.

NOTES ON CHAP. III.

Verse 1. By night on my bed I sought him] It appears that the bridegroom only saw the bride by night : that on the night referred to here he did not come as usual. The bride, troubled on the account, rose and sought him ; inquired of the city guards, and continued to seek till at last she found him, and brought him to her apartment, ver. 2-4.

Verse 4. Into my mother's house] The women in the East have all separate apartments, into which no person ever attempts to enter except the husband. We find Isaac bringing Rebecca into his mother's tent, when he made her his wife, Gen. xxiv. 67. What is here related appears to refer to the third night of the nuptials.

Verse 5. I charge you] The same adjuration as before, chap. ii. 7.

Verse 6. Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness] Going to Egypt was called descending or going down, coming from it was termed coming up. The bride, having risen, goes after her spouse to the country, and the clouds of incense arising from her palanquin seemed like pillars of smoke ; and the appearance was altogether so splendid as to attract the admiration of her own women, who converse about her splendour, excellence, &c., and then take occasion to describe Solomon's nuptial bed and chariot. Some think that it is the bridegroom who is spoken of here.

With this verse the third night is supposed to end.

Verse 7. Threescore valiant men] These were the guards about the pavilion of the bridegroom, who derness like pillars of smoke, perfumed with myrrh and frankincense, with all powders of the merchant ?

10 He made the pillars thereof of silver, the bottom thereof of gold, the covering of it of purple, the midst thereof being paved with love, for the daughters of Jerusalem.

were placed there because of fear in the night. The security and state of the prince required such a guard as this, and the passage is to be literally understood.

Verse 8. They all hold swords] They are swordsmen. Every man has a sword, and is well instructed how to use it.

Verse 9. Of the wood of Lebanon.] Of the cedar that grew on that mount. It is very likely that a nuptial bed, not a chariot, is intended by the original word אֲפִירְיוֹן appiryon. Montanus properly translates it sponsarum thalamum, a nuptial bed. It may, however, mean a palanquin.

Verse 10. The pillars—of silver] The bedposts were made of silver, or eased with wrought silver plates, like the king's chairs brought from Hanover, now in one of the state-rooms in WindSOR Castle.

The bottom thereof of gold] This may refer to cords made of gold thread, or to the mattress, which was made of cloth ornamented with gold.

The covering—of purple] Most probably the canopy.

The midst—paved with love] The counterpane, a superb piece of embroidery, wrought by some of the noble maids of Jerusalem, and, as a proof of their affection, respect, and love, presented to the bride and bridegroom, on their nuptial day. This is most likely to be the sense of the passage, though some suppose it to refer to the whole court.

A Turkish couch is made of wooden lattices painted and gilded ; the inside is painted with baskets of flowers and nosegays, intermixed with little mottoes.

according to the fancy of the artist. Solomon's couch may have been of the same kind, and decorated in the same way; and the paving with love may refer to the amatory verses worked either on the counterpane, hangings, or embroidered carpet. And as this was done by the daughters of Jerusalem, they might have expressed the most striking parts of such a chaste history of love as Halaly's Leely and Mejnoon on the different parts. I see that Dr. Good is of this opinion. It is sufficiently probable.

Verse 11. Go forth, O ye daughters of Zion] This is the exhortation of the companions of the bride to the females of the city to examine the superb appearance of the bridegroom, and especially the nuptial crown, which appears to have been made by Bath-sheba, who it is supposed might have lived till the time of Solomon's marriage with the daughter of Pharaoh. It is conjectured that the prophet refers to a nuptial crown, Isa. lxi. 10. But a crown, both on the bride and bridegroom, was common among most people on such occasions. The nuptial crown among the Greeks and Romans was only a chaplet or wreath of flowers.

In the day of the gladness of his heart.] The day in which all his wishes were crowned, by being united to that female whom beyond all others he loved.

Here the third day is supposed to end

NOTES ON CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. Thou hast doves' eyes within thy locks] Perhaps this refers rather to a sort of veil worn by many of the Eastern women, but especially in Egypt. It is a species of black cloth made of the hair of some animal, probably the black goat; is suspended from the head by silken cords, one of which comes from the crown of the head, down the forehead, to the upper part of the nose, just under the eyes, at which place the veil begins; for the forehead and the eyes are uncovered, except the cord above mentioned, which is ornamented with gold, silver, and precious stones, according to the circumstances of the wearer. This partial veil not only covers all the face, the eyes and forehead excepted, but the neck also, and hangs loosely down over the bosom. One of them, lately brought from Egypt, now lies before me. But the clause, within thy locks, לְצִנְחָךְ mitsnāach letsammathech, is not well translated, either by ourselves or by the versions. Jerome's translation is an indication of the meaning: Absque eo quod intrinsecus latet; without that, or independently of that, which lies hidden within. The Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic have, besides thy silence. Calmet contends that none of these gives the true meaning, and that the word צִנְחָה tsemath has not the meaning of hair or locks wherever it occurs, and is quite a different meaning in Isa. xlvii. 2. St. Jerome on this place expresses himself thus: Nolentibus qui interpretati sunt transferre nomen quod in Sancta Scriptura sonat turpitudinem.—Ergo צִנְחָה letsammathech, quod Aquila posuit, verenda mulieris appellantur cujus etymologia apud eos sonat sitiens

tuus. Calmet translates: Vous êtes toute belle, mon amie; vous êtes toute belle: vos yeux sont des yeux de colombe; sans ce que la pudeur et la modestie tiennent caché. I leave the translation of these to the learned reader. See another description under ver. 7.

As a flock of goats] Because it was black and sleek, as the hair of the goats of Arabia and Palestine is known to be; which, with its fine undulation, is supposed to bear some resemblance to the curls or plaits of a woman's tresses. The mountains of Gilead were beyond Jordan, on the frontiers of Arabia Deserta.

Verse 2. Thy teeth are like a flock] This comparison appears to be founded on the evenness, neatness, and whiteness of the newly shorn and newly washed sheep.

Verse 3. Thy lips are like a thread of scarlet] Both lips and cheeks were ruddy; sicut fragmen mali punici.—VULGATE. Like the section of a pomegranate, that side cut off on which is the finest blush. This is a good and apt metaphor. But the inside may be referred to, as it is finely streaked with red and white melting into each other. She had beautiful hair, beautiful eyes, beautiful cheeks and lips, and a most pleasing and dulcet voice.

Within thy locks.] See on ver. 1, and on ver. 7.

Verse 4. Thy neck is like the tower of David] It is certain that bucklers were frequently hung about towers, both for their ornaments, and to have them at hand when their use was required; see Ezek. xxvii. 10. But the allusion here may be to those pillars which are often seen in armouries on which weapons of various kinds are hung, formed into a great variety of shapes builted <sup>g</sup> for an armoury, where-and very splendid. Whoever has seen the armoury in the tower of London, or such like places, has most probably seen something very similar to that of which the poet speaks.

Verse 5. Thy two breasts are like two young roes] I have met with many attempts to support this similitude, or rather to show that there is a similitude; but I judge them unworthy of citation. The poet speaks the language of nature; and in a case of this kind, where the impassioned lover attempts to describe the different perfections of his bride, language often fails him, and his comparisons and similitudes are often without strict correctness. In love songs we have heard ladies' necks compared to that of the swan, not only for its whiteness, but also for its length! The description here shows more of nature than of art, which I consider a high recommendation.

Feed among the lilies.] It may be the nipples especially, which the poet compares to the two young roes; and the lilies may refer to the whiteness of the breasts themselves.

Verse 6. Until the day break] Until the morning breeze. See chap. ii. 17.

The shadows flee away] Till the sun sets.

Mountain of myrrh] Probably the same as the mountains of Bether, chap. ii. 17. Mountains where the trees grew from which myrrh and incense were extracted.

Verse 7. Thou art all fair—there is no spot in thee.] “My beloved, every part of thee is beautiful; thou hast not a single defect.”

The description given of the beauties of Daphne, by Ovid, Metam. lib. i. ver. 497, has some similarity to the above verses:—

Spectat inornatos collo pendere capillos.

Et, quid si comantur? ait. Videt igne micantes

Sideribus similes oculos; videt oscula, quæ non

Est vidisse satis. Laudat digitosque, manusque,

Brachiaque, et nudos media plus parte lacertos.

Si qua latent meliora putat.

Her well-turn'd neck he view'd, (her neck was bare,) And on her shoulders her dishevell'd hair.

O, were it comb'd, said he, with what a grace

Would every waving curl become her face!

He view'd her eyes, like heavenly lamps that shone,

He view'd her lips, too sweet to view alone;

Her taper fingers, and her panting breast.

He praises all he sees; and, for the rest,

Believes the beauties yet unseen the best. DRYDEN.

Jayadeva describes the beauty of Radha in nearly the same imagery: “Thy lips, O thou most beautiful among women, are a bandhujiva flower; the lustre of the madhuca beams upon thy cheek; thine eye out-flee away, I will get me to the mountain of myrrh, and to the hill of frankincense.

7 <sup>l</sup> Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee.

8 Come with me from Lebanon, my spouse, with me from Lebanon: look from the top of shines the blue lotos; thy nose is a bud of the tila; the cunda blossom yields to thy teeth. Surely thou descendedst from heaven, O slender damsel! attended by a company of youthful goddesses; and all their beauties are collected in thee.” See these poems, and the short notes at the end.

The same poet has a parallel thought to that in ver. 5, “Thy two breasts,” &c. The companions of Radha thus address her: “Ask those two round hillocks which receive pure dew drops from the garland playing on thy neck, and the buds on whose tops start aloft with the thought of thy beloved.”

Verse 8. My spouse. The בלה callah, which we translate spouse, seems to have a peculiar meaning. Mr. Harmer thinks the Jewish princess is intended by it; and this seems to receive confirmation from the bridegroom calling her sister, ver. 9, that is, one of the same stock and country; and thus different from the Egyptian bride.

Mr. Harmer's opinion is very probable, that two queens are mentioned in this song: one Pharaoh's daughter, the other a Jewess. See his outlines. But I contend for no system relative to this song.

Look from the top of Amana, &c.] Solomon, says Calmet, by an admirable poetic fiction, represents his beloved as a mountain nymph, wholly occupied in hunting the lion and the leopard on the mountains of Lebanon, Amana, Shenir, and Hermon. As a bold and undisciplined virgin, who is unwilling to leave her wild and rural retreats, he invites her to come from those hills; and promises to deck her with a crown, and to make her his bride. Thus the poets represent their goddess Diana, and even Venus herself:—

Per juga, per sylvas, dumosaque saxa vagatur

Nuda genu, vestem ritu succincta Dianæ;

Hortaturque canes; tutaque animalia prædæ,

Aut pronos lepores, aut celsum in cornua cervum,

Aut agitat damas: at fortibus abstinet apris.

MET. lib. x., ver. 535.

Now buskin'd like the virgin huntress goes

Through woods, and pathless wilds, and mountain snows.

With her own tuneful voice she joys to cheer

The panting hounds that chase the flying deer.

She runs the labyrinth of the fearful hares,

But fearless beasts and dangerous prey forbears.

Mount Libanus separates Phœnicia from Syria. Amana is between Syria and Silicia. Shenir and Hermon are beyond Jordan, to the south of Damascus and Mount Libanus, and northward of the mountains of Gilead. Hermon and Shenir are but different parts of the same chain of mountains which separates Trachonitis, or the country of Manasses, from Arabia

Amana, from the top of Shenir wine! and the smell of thine ointments than all spices!

11 Thy lips, O my spouse, drop as the tongue; and the smell of thy garments is like the smell of Lebanon.

<sup>11</sup> Prov. xxiv. 13, 14; chap. v. 1.

Deserta. For these places, see 2 Kings v. 12, and Deut. iii. 9, where they are probably meant.

Verse 9. Thou hast ravished my heart] לכבבתי libbabtini, "Thou hast hearted me," i. e., taken away my heart; as we say, "He has barked the tree," i. e., he has stripped it of its bark; "He has fleeced the flock," i. e., deprived them of their wool.

With one of thine eyes] באחד מעיניך bechad meeynayich. This has been thought a harsh expression, and various emendations have been sought. The Masoretes have put בארת bechath, "at once," in the margin; and this is confirmed by twenty of Kennicott's MSS.; but De Rossi does not notice it. It is scarcely necessary; the sense to me is clear and good without it. "Even one of thine eyes, or one glance of thine eyes, has been sufficient to deprive me of all power; it has completely overcome me;" for glance may be understood, and such forms of speech are common in all languages, when speaking on such subjects. If even taken literally, the sense is good; for the poet may refer to a side glance, shot in passing by or turning away, where only one eye could be seen.
I think this a better sense than that which is obtained from the Masoretic emendation.

With one chain of thy neck] Probably referring to the play of the cervical muscles, rather than to necklaces, or ringlets of hair.

Verse 10. How much better is thy love] דודך do-dayich; Hebrew. מאסותי; Septuagint. Uberta tua; Vulgate. "Thy breasts." And so all the versions, except the Chaldee.

Smell of thine ointments] Perfumes.

Verse 11. Thy lips—drop as the honey-comb] Thy words are as delicious to my heart as the first droppings of the honey-comb are to the palate.

Honey and milk are under thy tongue] Eloquence and persuasive speech were compared among the ancients to honey and milk.

Thus Homer, Iliad, lib. i., ver. 247:—

Τοισι δὲ Νεστωρ

Ἡδυνεπὴς ἀνοράσσει, λιγυρὸς Πυλίων ἀγορητὴς, Τὸν καὶ ἀπὸ γλῶσσης μελιτὸς γλυκιὼν ῥέει ἀνδρῶν.

14 Spikenard and saffron; calamus and cinnamon, with all trees of frankincense; myrrh and aloes, with all the chief spices:

15 A fountain of gardens, a well of living waters, and streams from Lebanon.

thereof may flow out. Let my beloved come

Experienced Nestor, in persuasion skill'd, Words sweet as honey from his lips distill'd.

But the figure is common to all writers and languages. A similar expression will be seen in the Gitagovinda.

Verse 12. A garden enclosed—a spring shut up, a fountain sealed.] Different expressions to point out the fidelity of the bride, or of the Jewish queen. See the outlines. She is unsullied, a chaste, pure virgin.
None has ever entered into this garden; none has yet tasted of this spring; the seal of this fountain has never been broken. Among the Athenians, the interior part of the house, called the women's apartment, was not only locked but sealed; so Aristophan., Thesmoph. ver. 422:—

Εἶτα δια τούτων ταῖς γυναικωνιτισίν
Σφραγίδας ἐμβαλλόνσιν ἥδη καὶ μοχλοῦς.

And on this account, to the women's apartment
They place seals as well as bolts.

And seal, as applicable to chaste conduct, is a phrase well known to the Greeks. Æschylus, in the Agamemnon, praises a woman, σημαντήριον σὺν δὲ διαφθεῖρασαν, who had not violated her seal of conjugal faith.
But Nonnus, lib. ii., uses the form of speech exactly as Solomon does with reference to a pure virgin; he says, Ἀφάνστον ἐν σφρηγίδα κορείης; "She had preserved the seal of her virginity untouched." All this is plain; but how many will make metaphors out of metaphors!

Verse 13. Thy plants are an orchard of pomegranates] This seems to refer to the fecundity of the bride or Jewish queen; to the former it would be a prediction; to the latter, a statement of what had already taken place. The word פֶּרֶדֶס parades, which we translate an orchard, is the same which has given birth to our paradise, a garden of pleasure. The other expressions, in this and the following verse, seem to refer wholly to matters of a connubial nature.

Verse 15. A fountain of gardens] Perhaps גַּנִּים gannim, "gardens," was originally חַיִּים chayim,
"lives," a living fountain, a continual spring. See

Houbigant. But this is expressed afterwards; though there would be nothing improper in saying, "a living fountain, a well of living waters, and streams from Mount Lebanon." A fountain of gardens may mean one so abundant as to be sufficient to supply many gardens, to water many plots of ground, an exuberant fountain. This is the allusion; the reference is plain enough.

Verse 16. Awake, O north wind; and come, thou south] "It is granted that the south wind in Palestine, in the summer, is extremely hot and troublesome; therefore, another interpretation of this passage has been proposed by Mr. Harmer; who thinks בּוֹיַם boi, which we render come, signifies enter into thy repositories; and, therefore, supposes the true interpretation of the words to be as follows: "Arise, thou north wind, (and retire, thou south,) blow upon my garden; let the spices thereof flow forth, that my beloved may come into his garden, invited by the coolness and fra-grancy of the air, and may eat his pleasant fruits; for, if the south wind blow, the excessive heat will forbid his taking the air, and oblige him to shut close the doors and windows of his apartments." Others think that he wishes the winds from all directions to carry throughout the land the fume of his spices, virtue, and perfections.

Let my beloved come into his garden] This is the invitation of the bride: and if we look not for far-fetched meanings, the sense is sufficiently evident. But commentators on this song sometimes take a literal sense where the metaphor is evident; at other times they build an allegory upon a metaphor. The Gita-govinda has an elegant passage similar to this. See the place, Part VII., beginning with Enter, sweet Radha.

The whole of this chapter is considered to be unconnected with any particular time of the marriage ceremonies.

NOTES ON CHAP. V.

Verse 1. I am come into my garden] בָּאתִי bathi, I came, or have come; this should be translated in the past tense, as the other preterite verbs in this clause. I think the latter clause of the preceding verse should come in here: "Let my beloved come into his garden, and eat his pleasant fruits. I have come into my garden, my sister, callah, or spouse; I have gathered my myrrh," &c. I have taken thee for my spouse, and am perfectly satisfied that thou art pure and immaculate.

Eat, O friends—drink abundantly] These are generally supposed to be the words of the bridegroom, after he returned from the nuptial chamber, and exhibited those signs of his wife's purity which the customs of those times required. This being a cause of universal joy, the entertainment is served up; and he invites his companions, and the friends of both parties, to eat and drink abundantly, as there was such a universal cause of rejoicing. Others think that these are the words of the bride to her spouse: but the original will not bear this meaning; the verbs are all plural.

Verse 2. I sleep, but my heart waketh] This is a new part; and some suppose that the fifth day's solemnity begins here. Though I sleep, yet so impressed is my heart with the excellences of my beloved, that my imagination presents him to me in the most pleasing dreams throughout the night. I doubt whether the whole, from this verse to the end of the seventh, be not a dream: several parts of it bear this resemblance; and I confess there are some parts of it, such as her hesitating to rise, his sudden disappearance, &c., which would be of easier solution on this supposition. Or part of the transactions mentioned might be the effects of the dream she had, as rising up suddenly, and going out into the street, meeting with the watchmen, &c., before she was well awake. And her being in so much disorder and dishabille might have induced them to treat her as a suspicious person, or one of questionable character. But it is most likely the whole was a dream.

For my head is filled with dew.] She supposed he had come in the night, and was standing without, wet, and exposed to the inclemency of the weather.

Verse 3. I have put off my coat] The bride must have been in a dream, or in much disorder of mind, 9 What is thy beloved more than another beloved, <sup>l</sup> O thou fairest among women? what is thy beloved more than another beloved, that thou dost so charge us?

10 My beloved is white and ruddy, <sup>m</sup> the chiefest among ten thousand.

11 His head is as the most fine gold, his locks are <sup>n</sup> bushy, and black as a raven.

12 <sup>o</sup> His eyes are as the eyes of doves by the rivers of waters, washed with milk, and <sup>p</sup> fitly set.

to have made the frivolous excuses here mentioned. The words relate to the case of a person who had gone to take rest on his bed. As they wore nothing but sandals, they were obliged to wash their feet previously to their lying down. I have washed my feet, taken off my clothes, and am gone to bed: I cannot therefore be disturbed. A Hindoo always washes his feet before he goes to bed. If called from his bed, he often makes this excuse, I shall daub my feet; and the excuse is reasonable, as the floors are of earth; and they do not wear shoes in the house.—WARD.

Verse 4. My beloved put in his hand] If it were a real scene, which is mentioned in this and the two following verses, it must refer, from the well-known use of the metaphors, to matrimonial endearments. Or, it may refer to his attempts to open the door, when she hesitated to arise, on the grounds mentioned ver. 3. But this also bears every evidence of a dream.

Verse 5. My hands dropped with myrrh] It was a custom among the Romans, as Brissonius, Isidore, and others relate, to conduct the bride to the house of the bridegroom with lighted torches; and those who brought her anointed the door-posts with fragrant oils, whence the name uxor, or as it was formerly written unxor, for a wife or married woman, because of the anointing which took place on the occasion; for sometimes the bride herself anointed the door-posts, and sometimes those who brought her; probably both at the same time. The same custom might have existed among the Jews. See Vossius' Etymologicon.

Verse 7. Took away my veil] They tore it off rudely, to discover who she was. See on ver. 2. To tear the veil signifies, in Eastern phrase, to deflower or dishonour a woman.

Verse 8. I am sick of love.] “I am exceedingly concerned for his absence; and am distressed on account of my thoughtless carriage towards him.” The latter clause may be well translated, “What should ye tell him?” Why, “that I am sick of love.” This ends the transactions of the third day and night.

Verse 9. What is thy beloved more than another beloved] This question gives the bride an opportunity to break out into a highly wrought description of the beauty and perfections of her spouse.

Verse 10. My beloved is white and ruddy] Red and white, properly mixed, are essential to a fine complexion; and this is what is intimated: he has the finest complexion among ten thousand persons; not one in that number is equal to him. Literally, “He bears the standard among ten thousand men;” or “He is one before whom a standard is borne,” i. e., he is captain or chief of the whole.

Verse 11. His head is as the most fine gold] He has the most beautiful head, fine and majestic. Gold is here used to express excellence.

His locks are bushy] Crisped or curled. This may refer to his mustachios.

Black as a raven.] His hair is black and glossy.

Verse 12. His eyes are as the eyes of doves] See on chap. iv. ver. 1.

Washed with milk] The white of the eye, exceedingly white. By the use of stibium, in the East, the eye is rendered very beautiful; and receives such a lustre from the use of this article, that, to borrow the expression of a late traveller, “their eyes appear to be swimming in bliss.” I believe this expression to be the meaning of the text.

Fitly set.] Or, as the margin, very properly, sitting in fulness; not sunk, not contracted.

Verse 13. His cheeks are as a bed of spices] Possibly meaning a bed in the garden, where odoriferous herbs grew. But it has been supposed to refer to his beard, which in a young well-made man is exceedingly beautiful. I have seen young Turks, who had taken much care of their beards, mustachios, &c., look majestic. Scarcely any thing serves to set off the human face to greater advantage than the beard, when kept in proper order. Females admire it in their suitors and husbands. I have known eases, where they not only despised but execrated Europeans, whose faces were close shaved. The men perfume their beards often ; and this may be what is intended by spices and sweet- smelling myrrh.

His lips like lilies] The שושנים shoshonim may mean any flower of the lily kind, such as the rubens lilium, mentioned by Pliny, or something of the tulip kind. There are tints in such flowers that bear a very near resemblance to a fine ruby lip.

Verse 14. His hands—gold rings set with the beryl]
This really seems to refer to gold rings set with precious stones on the fingers, and perhaps to circlets or bracelets about the wrists. Some suppose it to refer to the roundness and exquisite symmetry of the hand and fingers. תרשש tarshish, which we translate beryl, a gem of a sea-green tint, had better be translated chrysolite, which is of a gold colour.

His belly—bright ivory overlaid with sapphires.] stones which went round his waist, and was peculiarly remarkable. If we take it literally, the sense is plain enough. His belly was beautifully white, and the blue veins appearing under the skin resembled the sapphire stone. But one can hardly think that this was intended.

Verse 15. His legs are as pillars of marble] Exquisitely turned and well-shaped ; the sockets of gold may refer to his slippers. On these a profusion of gold and ornaments are still lavished in Asiatic countries.

His countenance is as Lebanon] As Lebanon exalts its head beyond all the other mountains near Jerusalem, so my beloved is tall and majestic, and surpasses in stature and majesty all other men. He is also as straight and as firm as the cedars.

Verse 16. His mouth is most sweet] His eloquence is great, and his voice is charming. Every word he speaks is sweetness, mildness, and benevolence itself.
Then, her powers of description failing, and metaphor exhausted, she cries out, "The whole of him is loveliness. This is my beloved, and this is my companion O ye daughters of Jerusalem."

NOTES ON CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. Whither is thy beloved gone] These words are supposed to be addressed to the bride by her own companions, and are joined to the preceding chapter by the Hebrew and all the versions.

Verse 2. My beloved is gone down into his garden]
The answer of the bride to her companions.

Verse 4. Beautiful—as Tirzah] This is supposed to be the address of Solomon to the bride. Tirzah was a city in the tribe of Ephraim, (Josh. xii. 24,) and the capital of that district. It appears to have been beautiful in itself, and beautifully situated, for Jero- boam made it his residence before Samaria was built ; and it seems to have been the ordinary residence of the kings of Israel, 1 Kings xiv. 17 ; xv. 53. Its name signifies beautiful or delightful.

4 Thou art beautiful, O my love, as Tirzah,

<sup>b</sup> Chap. ii. 16 ; vii. 10.

Comely as Jerusalem] This was called the perfection of beauty, Ps. xlviii. 2, 3 ; l. 2. And thus the poet compares the bride's beauty to the two finest places in the land of Palestine, and the capitals of the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah.

Terrible as an army with banners.] This has been supposed to carry an allusion to the caravans in the East, and the manner in which they are conducted in their travels by night. The caravans are divided into companies, called cottors, according to Thevenot ; and each company is distinguished by the form of the brazier in which they carry their lights. After night, these braziers are placed on the ends of long poles, and carried by a person who walks at the head of the company. Some have ten or twelve lights, and are of different forms ; some triangular, or like an N : some

grims, divided into various cottors or companies, each having its own distinguishing brazier or light, must necessarily produce a very splendid, if not a terrible, appearance.

Verse 5. Turn away thine eyes] As the sight of so many fires after night was extremely dazzling, and the eye could not bear the sight, so the look of the bride was such as pierced the heart, and quite overwhelmed the person who met it. Hence the bridegroom naturally cries out, “Turn away thine eyes from me, for they have overcome me.”

Verse 9. The daughters saw her, and blessed her] Not only the Jewish women in general spoke well of her on her arrival, but the queens and concubines praised her as the most accomplished of her sex.

With this verse the fourth night of the marriage week is supposed to end.

Verse 10. Looketh forth as the morning] The bride is as lovely as the dawn of day, the Aurora, or perhaps the morning star, VENUS. She is even more resplendent, she is as beautiful as the Moon. She even surpasses her, for she is as clear and bright as the Sun; and dangerous withal to look on, for she is as formidable as the vast collection of lights that burn by night

<sup>k</sup> Heb. I knew not.—<sup>l</sup> Or, set me on the chariots of my willing people.—<sup>m</sup> Or, of Mahanaim; Gen. xxxii. 2.

Verse 11. I went down into the garden of nuts] I believe this and the following verse refer at least to the preparations for a farther consummation of the marriage, or examination of the advancement of the bride's pregnancy. But many circumstances of this kind are so interwoven, and often anticipated and also postponed, that it is exceedingly difficult to arrange the whole so as to ascertain the several parts, and who are the actors and speakers. But other writers find no difficulty here, because they have their system; and that explains all things.

It is probably not the hazel but the almond nut,
that is referred to here.

Verse 12. The chariots of Amminadib.] Probably for their great speed these chariots became proverbial.
The passage marks a strong agitation of mind, and something like what we term palpitation of the heart.
As I am not aware of any spiritual meaning here, I must be excused from commenting on that which is literal. Amminadib signifies my noble or princely people; but it may here be a proper name, and Ammi-nadib might be celebrated for his skill and rapidity in driving, as Jehu was.

Verse 13. Return, O Shulamite] This appears to be addressed to the bride, as now the confirmed, acknowledge wife of Solomon; for שולמית shulamith, appears to be a feminine formed from שלמה shelomoh, שלמון shelomon, as we form Charlotte from Charles;
Henrietta, from Henry; Janette, from John, &c.

The company of two armies.] Or the musicians of the camps. She is as terrible as hosts of armed men, on the ground of what is said on verses 4, 5. The two armies may refer to the choirs of the bride's virgins, and the bridegroom's companions; but the similitude is not very perceptible. The Targum explains it of “the camps of Israel and Judah:” as if the bridegroom should say, “My beloved possesses all the perfections both of the Israelitish and Jewish women.” But how little satisfaction do the best con- jectures afford!

With this chapter the fifth night is supposed to end.

NOTES ON CHAP. VII.

Verse 1. How beautiful are thy feet with shoes] “How graceful is thy walking.” In the sixth chapter the bridegroom praises the Shulamite, as we might express it, from head to foot. Here he begins a new description, taking her from foot to head.

The shoes, sandals, or slippers of the Eastern ladies are most beautifully formed, and richly embroidered. The majestic walk of a beautiful woman in such shoes is peculiarly grand. And to show that such a walk is intended, he calls her a prince's daughter.

The joints of thy thighs] Must refer to the ornaments on the beautiful drawers, which are in general use among ladies of quality in most parts of the East.

Verse 2. Thy navel is like a round goblet] This may also refer to some ornamental dress about the loins. These suppositions are rendered very probable from hundreds of the best finished and highly decorated drawings of Asiatic ladies in my own collection, where every thing appears in the drawings, as in nature.

A heap of wheat set about with lilies.] This is another instance of the same kind. The richly embroidered dresses in the above drawings may amply illustrate this also. Ainsworth supposes the metaphor is taken from a pregnant woman; the child in the womb being nourished by means of the umbilical cord or navel string, till it is brought into the world. After which it is fed by means of the mother's breasts, which are immediately mentioned. Possibly the whole may allude to the bride's pregnancy.

Verse 3. Thy two breasts] Where the hair and breasts are fine, they are the highest ornaments of the person of a female.

Verse 4. Thy neck—as a tower of ivory] High, white, and ornamented with jewellery, as the tower of David was with bucklers. See on chap. iv. 4.

The fish-pools in Heshbon] Clear, bright, and serene. These must have been very beautiful to have been introduced here in comparison. These two fountains appear to have been situated at the gate that led from Heshbon to Rabba, or Rabboth Ammon. There is a propriety in this metaphor, because fountains are considered to be the eyes of the earth.

Thy nose—as the tower of Lebanon] There was doubtless a propriety in this similitude also, which cannot now be discerned. If we are to understand the similitude as taken from the projecting form of the nose, even here I see nothing striking in the metaphor; for surely the tower of Lebanon did not project from the mountain as the human nose does from the face. It is better to acknowledge that there was undoubtedly some fit resemblances; but in what circumstance we know not. But some commentators are always extolling the correctness of the imagery in those very difficult places, where no soul sees the similitude but themselves.

Verse 5. Thine head—like Carmel] Rising majestically upon thy neck, and above thy shoulders, as Mount Carmel does in its district. Carmel was the name of the mountain where Elijah had his contest with the prophets of Baal. See 1 Kings xviii. 19, &c.

The hair of thine head like purple] Ornamented with ribbons and jewellery of this tint.

The king is held in the galleries.] Or is detained in the antechamber. His heart is captivated by thy person and conduct. Some understand the ringlets of the bride's hair.

Verse 6. How fair and how pleasant] Thou art every way beautiful, and in every respect calculated to inspire pleasure and delight.

Verse 7. Like to a palm tree] Which is remarkably straight, taper, and elegant.

And thy breasts to clusters of grapes.] Dates are the fruit of the palm tree; they grow in clusters; and it is these, not grapes, which are intended.

Verse 8. I will go up to the palm tree] I will take hold on the boughs of this tree, and climb up by them, in order to gather the clusters of dates at the top. The rubric here in the old MS. interprets this of the cross of Christ.

The voice or conversation of the spouse is most probably what is meant.

Causing the lips of those that are asleep to speak.] As good wine has a tendency to cause the most backward to speak fluently when taken in moderation; so a sight of thee, and hearing the charms of thy conversation, is sufficient to excite the most taciturn to speak, and even to become eloquent in thy praises.

Verse 10. I am my beloved's, and his desire is toward me.] It is worthy of remark that the word which we translate his desire is the very same used Gen. iii. 16: Thy desire, thy ruling appetite, תשוקתך teshukathech, shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee. This was a part of the woman's curse. Now here it seems to be reversed; for the bride says, I am my beloved's, and his desire or ruling appetite and affection, תשוקתו teshukatho, is עלי ali, upon me. The old MS. translates this with considerable force: — Æ to my leaf, and to me the turnage of him.

Verse 11. Let us go forth into the field] It has been conjectured that the bridegroom arose early every morning, and left the bride's apartment, and withdrew to the country; often leaving her asleep, and commanding her companions not to disturb her till she should awake of herself. Here the bride wishes to accompany her spouse to the country, and spend a night at his country house.

Verse 12. Let us get up early to the vineyards] When in the country, we shall have the better opportunity to contemplate the progress of the spring vegetation; and there she promises to be peculiarly affectionate to him.

Verse 13. The mandrakes give a smell] See the note on Gen. xxx. 14, where the mandrake is particularly described; from which this passage will receive considerable light. The reader is requested to consult it.

All manner of pleasant fruits] Fruits new and old; flowers and herbs of every kind which the season could yield. The literal sense, allowing for the concealing metaphors, is, I believe, of a widely different nature from what is generally given. But this must be left to the reader's sagacity and prudence.

NOTES ON CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. O that thou wert as my brother] The bride, fearing that her fondness for her spouse might be construed into too great a familiarity, wishes that he were her little brother; and then she might treat him in the most affectionate manner, and kiss him even in the streets without suspicion, and without giving offence to any one.

Verse 2. Would—bring thee into my mother's house, who would instruct me] She would teach me how to conduct myself towards thee, as she would how to nurse a young child.

To drink of spiced wine] Wine rendered peculiarly strong and invigorating. The bride and bridegroom on the wedding day both drank out of the same cup, to show that they were to enjoy and equally bear together the comforts and adversities of life.

Verse 5. That cometh up from the wilderness] Perhaps the words of the daughters of Jerusalem, who, seeing the bride returning from the country, leaning on the arm of her beloved, are filled with admiration at her excellent carriage and beauty.

I raised thee up under the apple tree] The original of this clause is obscure, and has given birth to various translations. The following is nearly literal. "Under the apple tree I excited thee (to espouse me:) there, thy mother contracted thee;—there, she that brought thee forth contracted thee (to me.) Or it may be understood of the following circumstance: The bridegroom found her once asleep under an apple tree, and awoke her; and this happened to be the very place where her mother, taken in untimely labour, had brought her into the world." And here the bridegroom, in his fondness and familiarity, recalls these little adventures to her memory.

The Vulgate gives this an abominable meaning.

Sub arbore malo suscitavi te: ibi corrupta est mater tua; ibi violata est genetrix tua; "I raised thee up under the apple tree: it was there that thy mother was corrupted; it was there that she who brought thee forth was violated." Spiritually, all this is applied to Eve losing her purity by sin; and Jesus as the promised seed raising her up by the promise of merey, through the blood of his cross. But the text says nothing of this.

Verse 6. Set me as a seal upon thine heart] It was customary in the Levant and other places to make impressions of various kinds upon the arms, the breast, and other parts. I have seen these often: some slight punctures are made, and the place rubbed over with a sort of blue powder that, getting between the cuticle and cutis, is never discharged; it continues in all its distinctness throughout life. The figures of young women are frequently thus impressed on the arms and on the breasts. If the bride alludes to any thing of this kind, which is very probable, the interpretation is easy. Let me be thus depicted upon thine arm, which being constantly before thy eyes, thou wilt never forget me; and let me be thus depicted upon thy breast, the emblem of the share I have in thy heart and affections. Do this as a proof of the love I bear to thee, which is such as nothing but death can destroy; and do it to prevent any realousy I might feel, which is as cruel as the grave, can the floods drown it: <sup>i</sup> if a man would give all the substance of his house for love, it would utterly be contemned.

8 <sup>k</sup> We have a little sister, and she hath no breasts: what shall we do for our sister in the day when she shall be spoken for?

9 If she be a wall, we will build upon her a palace of silver: and if she be a door, we will enclose her with boards of cedar.

10 I am a wall, and my breasts like tow-

and as deadly as fiery arrows or poisoned darts shot into the body.

A most vehement flame.] שלהבת shalhebethyah, "the flame of God;" for the word is divided שלהבת shalhebeth Yah, "the flame of Jehovah," by one hundred and sixteen of Dr. Kennicott's MSS., and by one hundred and fourteen of those of De Rossi. It may mean the lightning; or, as our text understands it, a most vehement or intense fire.

Verse 7. Many waters] Neither common nor uncommon adversities, even of the most ruinous nature, can destroy love when it is pure; and pure love is such that nothing can procure it. If it be not excited naturally, no money can purchase it, no property can procure it, no arts can persuade it. How vain is the thought of old rich men hoping to procure the affections of young women by loading them with presents and wealth! No woman can command her affections; they are not in her power. Where they do not rise spontaneously, they can never exist. "If a man would give all the substance of his house for love, it would be utterly contemned." Let the old, as well as the gay and the giddy, think of this.

Verse 8. We have a little sister] This young girl belonged most probably to the bride.

She hath no breasts] She is not yet marriageable.

What shall we do for our sister] How shall we secure her comfort and welfare?

In the day when she shall be spoken for?] When any person shall demand her in marriage.

Verse 9. If she be a wall] All these expressions, says Calmel, show that it was necessary to provide a husband for this young sister. For a woman without a husband is like a wall without towers, and without defence; is like a gate or door without bar or lock; and like a city without walls. They must therefore provide for their sister a rich, powerful, and illustrious man; qualities here figured by towers or palaces of silver, and doors of cedar. As it is customary to build towers upon a wall, and to put bolts and bars upon a door in order to secure it, so the expressions may point out the defence, protection, and guardianship which they imagined this young woman to require.

Verse 10. I am a wall, and my breasts like towers] I am become marriageable, and I stood in need of the defence I have now in my beloved; and as soon as I was so, and became pleasing in the eyes of my beloved,

I was given to him in marriage, and have ever since found favour in his sight. As soon then as my sister is in my state, let a proper match be sought out for her. These expressions show the solicitude which the bride felt for her sister, and in her favour she wishes to interest her spouse.

Verse 11. Solomon had a vineyard] Calmet translates and paraphrases the Hebrew of these two verses thus : “ Ver. 11. Solomon has a vineyard at Baalhamon : he has let it out to keepers, each of whom for the fruit of it was to bring a thousand pieces of silver.
Ver. 12. As for me, my vineyard is before me ; that is, it is my own ; I am its proprietor. Keep thyself, O Solomon, thy thousand pieces of silver, and let those who dress (thy vineyard) have two hundred for their trouble. I neither envy thee thy vineyard, nor them their profits. I am satisfied with my own. My beloved is my vineyard—my heritage ; I would not change him for all the riches of the universe.”

Some suppose that there is a reference here to some property which Pharaoh had given to Solomon with his daughter. See Harmer's Outlines, where this subject is considered at large.

Verse 13. Thou that dwellest in the gardens] This is supposed to refer to the bridegroom asking permission of his spouse early in the morning to retire, as was his usual custom. He intimates the companions were waiting to hear, and he wished to hear it in the way of permission to depart.

Verse 14. Make haste, my beloved] These appear to be the words of the bride giving permission, but entreating him to speed his return. What these mountains of spices were, we cannot particularly tell ;

but they must have been thus named from their producing the trees on which the spices grew. They might have been the same as the mountains of Bether, chap.
ii. 17, or the mountains of myrrh, chap. iv. 6 ; where

Here ends the seventh night of the marriage week.

Thus ends this most singular book ; the oldest pastoral in the world, if it may be ranked among this species of writing. To whatever species of composition it belongs, it is, beyond all controversy, the finest, the most sublime for imagery and colouring, that ever came from the pen of man.

In the preceding notes I have carefully avoided all attempts to spiritualize this song. My reasons I have already given in the introduction ; and in the course of writing these short notes I have seen no cause to alter my opinion. Any man may allegorize it ; that is an easy matter ; for when he once considers it to be an allegory, his own creed will furnish him with enough to say, write, or preach, upon the spiritual meanings of every part, which will be an exhibition of his own confession of faith ! But when he has finished his work, the question will recur, By what authority do you give it these meanings ? And till the day of judgment none shall be able to say, “ I have the authority of God for my exposition.”

SONG OF SONGS.

CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. The song of songs, &c.] The songs and hymns which Solomon the prophet, king of Israel, delivered by the (b) spirit of prophecy, before Jehovah, the Lord of the whole world. Ten songs are sung in this world; but this is the most excellent of them all. The first song Adam sang, at the time when his sins were forgiven him; and when the Sabbath day came, he put a covering upon his lips, and sang (c) a psalm or song for the Sabbath day. The second song sang Moses with the children of Israel, at the time when the Lord of the world divided the Red Sea for them; then they all of them opened their mouths, and sang as one song, as it is written, (d) "Then sang Moses and the children of Israel." The third song the children of Israel sang at the time that the well of water was given to them, as it is written, (e) "Then sang Israel." The fourth song Moses the prophet sang, when his time was come 'o (f) depart out of the world, and in which he reposed the people of the house of Israel, as it is written, (g) "Give ear, O heavens, and I will speak." The fifth song Joshua the son of Nun sang, when he fought in Gibeon, and the sun and moon stood still for him (h) thirty and six hours: when they ceased from singing, he himself opened his mouth, and sang this song, as it is written, (i) "Then sang Joshua before the Lord." The sixth song Barak and Deborah sang, in the day that the Lord delivered Sisera and his army into the hands of the children of Israel, as it is written, (k) "Then sang Deborah and Barak, the son of Abinoam." The seventh song Hannah sang, at the time when a son was given her by the Lord, as it is written, (l) "And Hannah prayed by the spirit of prophecy, and said." The eighth song David the king of Israel sang, on the account of all the wonders which the Lord did for him. He opened his mouth, and sang this song, as it is written, (m) "And David sang by the spirit of prophecy before the Lord." The ninth song Solomon the king of Israel sang by the Holy Spirit before Jehovah, the Lord of the whole world. And the tenth song the children of the captivity shall sing at the time when they shall come out of captivity; as it is written and explained by Isaiah the prophet, (n) This song shall be unto you for joy in the night, that the feast of the passover is kept holy, and gladness of heart; as when the people go to appear before the Lord, three times

(a) The word תרגום signifies an exposition, or interpretation, or a translation of one language into another; and here of the Hebrew text into the Chaldee language, with an explanation. The first use of these translations was after the return of the Jews from Babylon, where they had almost lost the Hebrew language; and, therefore, were necessary for the understanding the law and the prophets. The translation of the five books of Moses was done by Onkelos, and that of the prophets by Jonathan Ben Uzziel, the former of whom lived a little after Christ, and the latter a little before him: but the translation of the IIagiographa, among which is this book of Canticles, is generally thought to be done by R. Joseph Cacus. The paraphrase on this book could not have been written till after the finishing of the Talmud, seeing express mention is made of it there.

(b) Which is the Holy Spirit, as it is afterwards explained. What the Targum says of this book is the mind of Jewish writers in general. Vide Mishna, Tract. Yadaim, c. 3, s. 5. Shirhashirim Rabba, in ver. 1. Midrash Koheleth, in ver. 1. Zohar, in Exod. fol. 59, 3. Jarchi and Aben Ezra, in Præfat in Cant. Kimchi in 1 Reg. 11, 41.

(c) Psa. xcii., which Psalm many Jewish writers think was made by the first man Adam; so Targum in Psa. xcii. Zohar in Gen. fol. 43, 2. Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 10. But in Shemoth Rabba, Parash. 23, it is said that Adam never composed any song: and that the song which Moses and the children of Israel sang at the Red Sea, was the first that ever was sung in the world; and, indeed, it is the first that is mentioned in Scripture.

(h) In Josh. x. 13, it is said, that "the sun stood still in the midst of heaven, and hasted not to go down" הָיָה הַיּוֹם כְּמֵת, "about a whole day," or a complete day, which, if we understand of an artificial day, was but twelve hours; and if of a natural day, twenty-four hours. Kimchi, on Josh. x. 13, says that this miracle was wrought in the summer solstice, and on the longest day in the year, which in the land of Canaan consists but of fourteen hours; whereas the Targum here says, the sun stood still thirty-six hours, which makes three artificial days, or one natural day and a half. Vide Ecclus. xli. 5.

in the year, with all kinds of music, and sound of the pipe, when they go up to the mountain of the Lord, to worship before the Lord, the mighty one of Israel.

Verse 2. Let him kiss me, &c.] Solomon the prophet said, "Blessed be the name of the Lord," who hath given us the law by the hands of Moses, (o) the great scribe, written upon two tables of stone, and the six parts of the (p) Mishna and Talmud (q) to study in; and he was speaking to us face to face, as a man kisseth his friend, because of the greatness of the love with which he loved us more than (r) the seventy nations.

Verse 3. Because of the savour, &c.] At the report of thy wonders and of thy power, which thou wroughtest for thy people the house of Israel. All the nations trembled who heard of the fame of thy greatness, and of thy favours; and thy holy name was heard in all the earth, which is more excellent than the anointing oil that was poured upon the heads of the kings and priests; and, therefore, the righteous love to walk in thy good way, that they may possess (s) this world, and the world to come.

Verse 4. Draw me, &c.] When the people of the house of Israel came out of Egypt, the shechinah of the Lord of the world went before them (t) in a pillar of cloud by day, and in a pillar of fire by night. The righteous of that generation said, Lord of all the world, draw us after thee, and we will run in thy good way; and bring us to the foot of Mount Sinai, and give us the law out of thy treasure house, the firmament; and we will rejoice and be glad, in the (u) twenty-two letters with which it is written; and we will remember them, and love thy deity; and will withdraw ourselves from the idols of the nations; and all the righteous which do what is right before thee shall fear thee, and love thy commandments.

Verse 5. I am black, &c.] When the house of Israel made the calf, their faces became black, like the sons of Cush, (v) which dwell in the tents of Kedar: but when they returned by repentance, and were forgiven, the brightness of the glory of their faces was increased, like the angels', because they made curtains for the tabernacle; therefore the shechinah of the Lord dwelt among them: and Moses, their master, went up into the (w) firmament, and made peace between them and their King.

Verse 6. Look not upon me, &c.] The congregation of Israel said before the nations, Do not despise me, because I am blacker than you, for I have done according to your works, and have (x) worshipped the sun and moon; for false prophets have been the cause that the fierce anger of the Lord hath come down upon me; and they taught me to worship your idols, and to walk in your laws: but the Lord of the world, who is my God, I have not served, nor walked in his commandments, nor have I kept his statutes and his law.

Verse 7. Tell me, O thou, &c.] When the time of Moses the prophet was come, to (y) depart out of the world, he said before the Lord, It is revealed unto me that this people will sin, and go into captivity; now show me how they shall be governed and dwell among the nations, whose decrees are grievous as the heat, and as the scorplings of the sun at noon, in the (z) summer solstice; and wherefore it is that they shall wander among the flocks of the sons of Esau and Ishmael, who join to thee their idols, for companions.

Verse 8. If thou know not, &c.] The holy blessed God said to Moses the prophet, It is their desire to smite the captivity of the congregation of Israel, which is like to a fair damsel: but my soul loveth her, therefore let her walk in the ways of the righteous, and let her order her prayer according to the direction of her governors, and let her lead her posterity, and teach her children, which are like to the kids of the goats, to go to the synagogue, and the school; and by that righteousness they shall be governed in the captivity, until the time that I send the King Messiah, and he shall lead them quietly to their habitations; yea, he shall bring them to the house of the sanctuary, which David and Solomon, the shepherds of Israel, built for them.

Verse 9. To a company of horses, &c.] When Israel went out of Egypt, Pharaoh and his host pursued after them with chariots and horsemen, and their

(p) The Mishna, which consists of six parts, is a collection of the traditions of the Jews, or their oral law, compiled by R. Judah, about the year of Christ 150.

(q) Or the Gemara, as it is read in Targum Triplex, printed with the Pentateuch. Of this Gemara, or Talmud, there are two sorts; the one is called the Jerusalem Talmud, which R. Jochanan collected together, about the year of Christ 230; the other is called the Babylonian Talmud, which was begun by R. Ase, in the year 367, who was succeeded in it by Maremar, in the year 427, and at last was finished by Avina, in the year 500. The former was written for the use of the Jerusalem Jews; the latter, for those in Babylon and other parts, and is most esteemed. It contains the disputations and decisions of the Jewish doctors upon the Mishna. Vide Buxtorf. Biblioth. Rab. p. 425.

(r) It is a generally received opinion among the Jews that seventy angels descended and confounded the language at Babel, from which time the earth was divided into seventy different nations, speaking seventy different languages. Vide Targum Jon. in Gen. xi. 7, 9.

(s) A like phrase see in Eph. i. 21 · Matt. xii. 32.

(t) Vide Exod. xii. 21, 22.

(u) The number of Hebrew letters in the alphabet. R. Isaac, in Shirhashirim Rabba in loc., gives the same sense of the words, which he collects from the word בַּח bach, in thee, בֵּת beth standing numerically for two, and כַּף caph, for twenty.

(v) The Ethiopians. Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. explains the words by Amos ix. 7: "Are ye not as the children of the Ethiopians unto me," &c.

(w) It is a received opinion among the Jews that Moses went up into the firmament of heaven; though the Scriptures only signify that he went up into Mount Sinai, and was in the midst of the cloud with God there. So the Targum on ver 11, 12, 14; and on Ps. lxxviii. 18.

(x) So it is explained in Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. See Deut. xvii. 3; Job xxxi. 26, 27; 2 Kings xxiii. 5, 11; Ezck. viii. 16.

(y) See note on ver. 1.

(z) The Jews, as here and elsewhere, call it תקופת תמוז tekuphath Tammuz, "the revolution of Tammuz." The sun is so called Ezck. viii. 14, which was worshipped under this name; it answers in part to our June, when the sun enters into the tropic of Cancer, and is what is meant by this revolution, Maimon. Hilch. Kiddush Hachodesh, c. 9, s. 2. Vide Targum, Jon. in Gen. viii. 22.

way was shut up on the four sides of them; on the right hand and on the left were wildernesses full of fiery serpents, and behind them was wicked Pharaoh and his army, and before them was the Red Sea. What did the holy blessed God do? He was manifested in the power of his might upon the Red Sea, and dried the sea up; but the mud he did not dry up. The wicked and the mixed multitude, and the strangers which were among them, said, The waters of the sea he is able to dry up; but the mud he is not able to dry up. In that very hour the fierce anger of the Lord came upon them; and he sought to drown them in the waters of the sea, as Pharaoh and his army, his chariots, and his horsemen, and his horses, were drowned; had it not been for Moses, the prophet, who spread his hands in prayer before the Lord, and turned away the anger of the Lord from them. Then he and the righteous of that generation opened their mouths, and sang a song, and passed through the Red Sea on dry land, because of the righteousness of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the beloved of the Lord.

Verse 10. Thy cheeks are comely, &c.] When they went out into the wilderness, the Lord said to Moses, How fair is this people; that the words of the law should be given unto them; and they shall be as bridles in their jaws, that they may not depart out of the good way, as a horse turneth not aside that has a bridle in his jaw; and how fair is their neck to bear (a) the yoke of my commandments; and it shall be upon them as a yoke upon the neck of a bullock, which plougheth in the field, and feeds both itself and its master!

Verse 11. We will make thee borders of gold, &c.] Then was it said to Moses, Go up into the firmament, and I will give thee the two tables of stone, hewed out of the (b) sapphire of the throne of my glory, shining as the best gold, disposed in rows, written with my finger, in which are engraven the (c) ten words, purer than silver that is purified seven times seven, which is the number of the things explained in them, (d) forty-nine ways; and they shall be given by thine hand unto the people of the house of Israel.

Verse 12. While the king sitteth, &c.] Whilst Moses their master was in the firmament, to receive the two tables of stone, and the law, and the commandments, the wicked of that generation, and the mixed multitude that was among them, rose up and made a golden calf, and caused their works to stink; and there went out an evil report of them in the world, for before this time a fragrant odour of them was diffused in the world: but afterwards they stank like (e) nard, whose smell is very bad; and the plague of leprosy came down upon their flesh.

Verse 13. A bundle of myrrh, &c.] At that time the Lord said unto Moses, Go down, for the people have corrupted themselves; desist from speaking to me, and I will destroy them. Then Moses returned and asked mercy of the Lord; and the Lord remembered for them the (f) binding of Isaac, whom his father bound on (g) Mount Moriah, upon the altar; and the Lord turned from his fierce anger, and caused his shechinah to dwell among them as before.

Verse 14. A cluster of camphire, &c.] Lo, then went Moses down with the two tables of stone in his hands; and because of the sins of Israel his hands grew heavy, and they fell and were broken. Then went Moses, and ground (h) the calf to powder, and scattered the dust of it upon the river, and made the children of Israel drink it, and slew all that deserved to die, and went up a second time into the firmament, and prayed before the Lord, and made atonement for the children of Israel; then was he commanded to make a tabernacle and an ark. Immediately Moses hastened, and made the tabernacle, and all its furniture, and the ark; and he put in the ark the two other tables, and appointed the sons of Aaron the priests to offer the offerings upon the altar, and to pour the wine upon the offerings: but from whence had they wine to pour? For in the wilderness they had no proper place for sowing, neither had they fig trees, nor vines, nor pomegranates; but they went to the vineyards of En-gedi, and took clusters of grapes from thence, and pressed wine out of them, and poured it upon the altar, the fourth part of a hin to one lamb.

Verse 15. Behold, thou art fair, &c.] When the children of Israel performed the will of their King, he (i) himself praised them, in the (k) family of the holy angels, and said, How fair are thy works, my daugh-

(a) It is very common in Jewish writings to compare the law to a yoke; so Targuin, in Lam. iii. 27. Mishna, Tract. Berac. c. 2, s. 2. Pirk. Aboth. c. 3, s. 5. Midrash Echa Rabbati, fol. 56, 3. Bereshith Rabba, Parash. 98. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 13. See Matt. xi. 29, and Acts xv. 10.

(d) In Psa. xii. 6, the place here referred to, the "words of the Lord" are said to be "as silver purified seven times;" where by שִׁבְתֵּי הַיָּם shibthayim some of the Jewish rabbins, agreeably to the Targum here, understand seven times seven, which makes forty-nine; and so many ways they say the law is capable of being interpreted, and that he is a wise man who is acquainted with them. (e) In Buxtorf's Bible it is read כְּגִידָא kegida, "like wormwood," which, indeed, well agrees with what is said of it; though Matthiolus says of nard, that when it has lost its sweet smell it stinks exceedingly. His words are these:

Plurimum accidit dum per Indicum et Arabicum mare in Alexandriam defertur, et unde Venetias, ut ascito sibi maris humore (id namque facile sit quod nardus sit sticissima) vel situm contrahat, vel supputrescat: unde postea amissa suavolentia, graviter olet.—Matthiolus in Dioscor. l. 1, c. 6.

(f) The Jews suppose the binding of Isaac to be very meritorious, and that by virtue of it their sins are expiated, and many blessings procured for them; and therefore in the beginning of the year they pray to God, that in mercy to Israel he would remember the binding of Isaac. ter, my beloved, O congregation of Israel, in the time that thou doest my will, and studiest in the words of my law; and how well ordered are thy works and thy affairs, as young doves that are fit to be offered up upon the altar!

Verse 16. Behold, thou art fair, &c.] The congregation of Israel answered before the Lord of the world, and thus she said, How fair is the shechinah of thy holiness, when thou dwellest among us, and receivest our prayers with acceptance, and when thou dwellest in our beloved bed, and our children are multiplied in the world, and we increase and multiply like a tree that is planted by a fountain of water, whose leaf is fair, and whose fruit is plenteous!

Verse 17. The beams of our house, &c.] Solomon the prophet said, How beautiful is the house of the sanctuary of the Lord, which is built by my hands of wood of (l) Gulmish: but far more beautiful will be the house of the sanctuary, which shall be built (m) in the days of the King Messiah, whose beams will be of the cedars of the garden of Eden, and whose rafters will be of brutine, fir, and box.

(l) A kind of cedar, see Eliæ Levitæ Methurgeman in voce. Targum Jon. in Num. xix. 6, and Ketoreth Hassammim, in ib. (m) The Jews expect a third temple to be built in the days of the Messiah. See R. Abendan. not. in Mielol Yophi, and Abarbinel in Hagg. ii. 9. R. Isaac Chizuk Emun. par. 1, c. 34. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 14.

CHAPTER II.

Verse 1. I am the rose of Sharon, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, When the Lord of the world causes his (a) shechinah to dwell in the midst of me, I am like the green daffodil of the garden of Eden, and my works are fair as the rose which is in the plain of the garden of Eden.

Verse 2. As the lily among thorns, &c.] But when I turn aside out of the way that is right before me, and he removes the shechinah of his holiness from me, I am like to a rose which flourishes among thorns, by which its leaves are pricked through and torn: even so am I pricked through and torn with wicked edicts, in the captivity among the (b) kings of the nations.

Verse 3. As the apple tree among the trees, &c.] As the pomecitron tree is beautiful, and to be praised among the unfruitful trees, and all the world knows it; so the Lord of the world was praised among the angels, when he was revealed on Mount Sinai, and gave the law unto his people; in that very hour I desired to sit under the shadow of his shechinah, and the words of his law were (c) fixed upon the roof of my mouth, and the reward of his commands is reserved for me in the world to come.

Verse 4. He brought me, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, The Lord brought me to the school which is in (d) Sinai, to learn the law from the mouth of Moses the great scribe; and the banner of his commandments I took upon me in love, and said, All that the Lord commandeth I will do, and will obey.

Verse 5. Stay me with flagons, &c.] But when I heard his voice, which spake out of the midst of the flame of fire, I trembled, and went backwards because of fear. Then I drew near to Moses and Aaron, and said unto them, Receive ye the voice of the words of the Lord, out of the midst of the fire, and bring me to the school, and sustain me with the words of the law on which the world is founded, and put veils upon my neck; for the interpretation of the holy words, which are sweet to my palate, are as the apples of the garden of Eden, and I will study in them: perhaps I may be healed by them, for I am sick of love.

Verse 6. His left hand is under my head, &c.] When the people of the house of Israel were travelling in the wilderness, they had (e) four clouds of glory at the four winds of the world round about them, that the (f) evil eye might not rule over them. There was one above them, that the heat and sun, as also the rain and hail, might not have power over them; and one below them, which carried them as a nurse carrieth her sucking child in her bosom; and another ran before them, at the distance of three days' journey, (g) to level the mountains, and to elevate the plains; and it slew all the fiery serpents and scorpions which were in the wilderness; and it spied out a convenient place for them to lodge in, that they might study in the doctrine of the law, which was given them by the right hand of the Lord.

Verse 7. I charge you, O ye daughters, &c.] After that it was commanded Moses, by the spirit of prophecy from the Lord, to send spies to spy the land, and when they returned from spying it, they brought an evil report upon the land of Israel, wherefore they tarried forty years in the wilderness. Moses opened his mouth, and thus he said, I adjure you, O congre-

(a) The word shechinah comes from שָׁכַן shachan, which signifies to dwell, and Elias Levita, in his Methurgeman, says that their wise men called the Holy Spirit so, because it dwelt upon the prophets; though perhaps, he says, there may be another sense of it among the Cabalistic doctors, of which he declares himself ignorant. It seems to intend the glorious majesty and presence of God with his Church and people, and is the same with St. John's σκηνή του Θεου, tabernacle or habitation of God, which is said to be with men, Rev. xxi. 3; and may very well be applied to the Messiah, Jesus, who was made flesh, και εσκηνοωσεν, and dwelt among us, John i. 14.

(b) In Buxtorf's Bible it is read פְּלִקֵּי pilkey, "the provinces of the nations."

(c) In Buxtorf's Bible it is read בְּסִירֵּךְ "were sweet to my palate, or taste."

(d) The same sense is given of those words in Shirhash-rin Rabba in loc., and in Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 2.

(e) The Jews are divided about the number of those clouds which they say attended the Israelites in their travels. R. Josiah says there were five of them, four at the four winds, and one went before them. R. Hoshea thinks there were seven, four at the four winds, one above, one below, and another that went before them; Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 1.

(f) That is, envy or malice.

(g) The same is ascribed to this cloud in Bemidbar Rabba, ubi supra, and in Jarchi in Cant. iii. 6.

gation of Israel, by the Lord of hosts, and by the fortresses of the land of Israel, that ye presume not to go up to the land of Canaan until it is the will of the Lord; lest the whole generation of warlike men perish from the camp, even as your brethren, the children of Ephraim, (h) who went out thirty years from Egypt, before the time came, and they fell into the hand of the Philistines, which dwell in Gath, and they slew them: but tarry ye unto the end of forty years, and your children shall go up and inherit it.

Verse 8. The voice of my beloved, &c.] Solomon the king said, When the people of the house of Israel dwelt in Egypt, their cry went up to the highest heavens. Lo! then was the glory of the Lord revealed to Moses on Mount Horeb; and he sent him into Egypt to deliver them, and to bring them out of the oppression of the tyranny of Egypt; and he leaped over the appointed season through the righteousness of their fathers, who are like to mountains; and he skipped over the time of a hundred and ninety years' (i) servitude, through the righteousness of their mothers, who are like to hills.

Verse 9. My beloved is like a roe, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, When the glory of the Lord was revealed in Egypt, in the night of the passover, and slew all the first-born, he rode upon a swift cloud, and ran like a roe or a young hart, and protected the houses in which we were, and stood behind our wall, and looked out of the windows, and beheld through the lattices, and saw the blood of the sacrifice of the passover, and the blood of circumcision which was fixed upon our gates; and he hastened from the highest heavens, and saw his people, who eat of the sacrifice of the feast which was roasted with fire, with (k) Tamea and Ulshin, and unleavened bread; and he spared us, and did not give power to the destroying angel to destroy us.

Verse 10. My beloved spake, and said unto me, &c.] And in the morning my beloved answered, and said unto me, Arise, O congregation of Israel, my love, who wast so of old, and who art fair in good works;

(h) The same story is reported in Targum Jon. in Exod. xiii. 7, where it is said that the number of the slain in this expedition was two hundred thousand mighty men, and that these are the dry bones Ezekiel saw in the valley, which upon his prophesying lived, and became an exceeding great army, Ezek. xxxvii. Something of this story is also hinted at in Shirhashirim Rabba, and Aben Ezra in loc. Vide 1 Chron. vii. 21, 22, and Kinchi, in ibid.

(i) The Jews unanimously agree, that from the time of Jacob's going down into Egypt to the coming up of the Israelites from thence were just two hundred and ten years; Targum Jon. in Exod. xii. 40. Shirhashirim Rabba, in c. 2, ver. 11, 17. Shemoth Rabba, Parash. 18. Jarchi in Gen. xv. 13, and in Exod. xii. 40; which some of them collect from the word רָדוּ redu, "get you down," used by Jacob, Gen. xlii. 2, when he ordered his sons to go down to Egypt, and buy corn, the letters of which word numerically make up 210. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 13. Jarchi in Gen. xlii. 2. R. Abendana not. in Micol Yophi in Exod. xii. 40; to which two hundred and ten years if we add the one hundred and ninety, which the Targumist here says were skipped over in order to hasten the deliverance of the Israelites from their bondage, there will be just the four hundred years God spake of to Abraham, Gen. xv. 13, and mentioned by Stephen, Acts. vii. 6, in which his seed should be a stranger, serve, be afflicted and evil entreated; which four hundred years may be reckoned after this manner: From the birth of Isaac to the birth of Jacob sixty years, Gen. xxv. 26; from thence to the go, get thee out from the bondage of the Egyptians.

Verse 11. For lo, the winter is past, &c.] For behold, the time of bondage, which is like to winter, is ceased; and the years (l) which I spake of to Abraham between the pieces are at an end; and the tyranny of the Egyptians, which is like to a violent rain, is over and gone; neither shall ye see them any more for ever.

Verse 12. The flowers appear on the earth, &c.] And Moses and Aaron, (m) who are like to branches of palm trees, appeared to do wonders in the land of Egypt; and the time of cutting the first-fruits is come, and the voice of the Holy Spirit of redemption, which I spake of to Abraham your father. Now ye hear what I said unto him; yea, the people whom ye shall serve I will judge, and after that ye shall come forth with great substance; and now it is my pleasure to do what I swear to him by my word.

Verse 13. The fig tree putteth forth, &c.] The congregation of Israel, which is like to the first-fruits of figs, opened her mouth, and sang a song at the Red Sea; yea, the babes and sucklings praised the Lord of the world with their tongues. Immediately the Lord of the world said unto them, Arise, O congregation of Israel, my love, and my fair one, and go from hence into the land which I have sworn unto thy fathers.

Verse 14. O my dove, that art in the clefts of the rock, &c.] And when wicked Pharaoh (n) pursued after the children of Israel, the congregation of Israel was like to a dove that is shut up in the clefts of the rock, when the serpent afflicts within, and the hawk oppresses without; even so the congregation of Israel was shut up on the four sides of the world, for before them was the sea, and behind them enmity (o) pursued; and on the two sides of them were the wildernesses, which were full of fiery serpents, which bite and kill the sons of men with their poison. And immediately she opened her mouth in prayer before the Lord, and Bath Kol (p) went out from the highest coming of Jacob into Egypt one hundred and thirty years. Gen. xlvii. 9; and from thence to the coming of the children of Israel out of Egypt two hundred and ten years; which completes the number. And if we begin the date from Abraham's going out from Ur of the Chaldees, and allow five years for his dwelling in Haran, as the Jews do, see Aben Ezra in Exod. xii. 40; from whose departure from thence to the birth of Isaac were twenty-five years, Gen. xii. 4, and xxi. 5; which thirty years, being added to the above-said four hundred, make up the number given by Moses, Exod. xii. 40, and by the apostle Paul, Gal. iii. 17.

(k) The names of the bitter herbs with which the paschal lamb was eaten, Exod. xii. 8. The same are mentioned in Targum Jon. in Exod. xii. 8; and in some of their writings three other herbs are mentioned, the names of which are Chazareth, Chareabina, and Meror, by which they intend horehound, endive, wild lettuce, eichory, and such like herbs; for they themselves do not seem very well to understand them. See Misna Tract. Pesach. c. 2, s. 6. Jarchi ib., and Maimon. Tract. Chametz. Umetza, c. 7, s. 13.

(l) So it is explained in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi in loc.

(m) So Shirhashirim Rabba, and Jarchi in loc.

(n) After the same manner Shirhashirim Rabba, and Jarchi in loc. Shemoth Rabba, Parash. 21.

(o) That is, the enemy; compare with this Rom. viii. 7.

(p) Frequent mention is made of this in the writings of the Jews. It was a voice from heaven which revealed secrets, heavens, and thus it said, O thou congregation of Israel, who art like to a clean dove, and which is hid in the closure of the clefts of the rock, and in the secret places of the stairs, show me thy countenance, and thy works, which are right; cause me to hear thy voice, for thy voice is sweet in prayer in the house of the little sanctuary, and thy countenance is fair in good works.

Verse 15. Take us the foxes, &c.] After that they had passed through the sea, they murmured for water; then came wicked Amalek against them, who hated them on the account of the birthright and blessing which Jacob our father took away from Esau; and he came to make war with Israel, for they had made void the words of the law; and wicked Amalek (q) stole from under the wings of the clouds of glory several persons from the tribe of Dan, and slew them, because the idol of Micah was in their hand. In that very hour the house of Israel, which is like to a vineyard, was condemned to be destroyed, except the righteous of that generation, who were like to the best spice.

Verse 16. My beloved is mine, &c.] In that very foretold future events, decided controversies, and directed in difficult matters; it was used in the second temple in the room of prophecy, which the Jews say then ceased, Talmud Sota, fol. 48, col. 2, and Sanhedrin, fol. 2, col. 4. R. Saadia Gaon in Dan. ix. 24. Shirhashirim Rabba in c. 8, 9. It is thought by R. Levi Ben. Gerson, in 2 Sam. i., s. 27, to be a more excellent and complete kind of divination; and indeed I am inclined to think that most of those voices which go under this name were the mere illusions of Satan, designed to deceive the people, and lessen the credit of those voices which were heard from heaven in the times of Christ. See Matt. iii. 17, and xvii. 5; John xii. 28.

hour they returned by repentance: then stood Moses the prophet, and prayed before the Lord; and Joshua his minister girded himself, and went out from under the (r) wings of the clouds of the glory of the Lord, and with him mighty men that were righteous, who in their works are like to the rose; and they made war with Amalek, and they broke Amalek and his people with the anathema of the Lord, and with slaughter, and with breach, and with the edge of the sword.

Verse 17. Until the day break, &c.] But in a very few days the children of Israel made the golden calf, and the clouds of glory which covered them removed; and they were left open, and were spoiled of the apparatus of their armour, on which was engraven the Great Name, (s) that is explained by seventy names. And the Lord sought to destroy them out of the world; but that he remembered before him the oath which he swore to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, who were swift in their service, as a roe or a young hart, and the offering which Abraham offered up, even Isaac, his own son, on Mount Moriah, and where, before then, he had offered his offering, and divided them equally.

(q) In Targ. Jon. in Exod. xvii. 8, where the same story is mentioned, it is said that those men of the tribe of Dan whom Amalek took and slew, were such whom the cloud did not receive and protect because of their idolatry.

(r) So Targum Jon. and Jarchi in Exod. xvii. 9, and Shemoth Rabba Parash. 26.

(s) This is the name Jehovah, which the Jews think it unlawful to pronounce; and therefore explain it by other names, usually by Adonai or Elohim. Here it is said to be explained by seventy names, sometimes by seventy-two; of which see Galatinus de Arcanis Cath. ver. 1, 2, c. 17, and Schindler, Lex. Pentaglot., p. 1492.

CHAPTER III.

Verse 1. By night on my bed, &c.] And when the people of the house of Israel saw that the clouds of glory were removed from them, and the holy crown (a) that was given to them at Sinai was taken from them, and they were left dark as the night; then they sought the holy crown, which was removed from them, but they found it not.

Verse 2. I will rise now, &c.] The children of Israel said one to another, Let us arise, and go and surround the tabernacle of the congregation, which Moses fixed without the camp; and let us seek instruction from the Lord, and the holy shechinah, which is removed from us. And they went about the cities, and in the streets, and in the broad places; but they found it not.

Verse 3. The watchmen that go about the city, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, (b) Moses and Aaron, and the Levites which keep the charge of the word of the tabernacle of the congregation, who go round about it, found me, and I inquired of them concerning the shechinah of the glory of the Lord, which was removed from me. Moses, the great scribe of Israel, answered, and thus he said: I will go up to the highest heavens, and I will pray before the Lord; perhaps atonement may be made for your transgressions, so that he may cause his shechinah to dwell among you as before.

Verse 4. It was but a little that I passed, &c.] It was but a very little time, and the Lord turned from the fierceness of his anger, and commanded Moses the prophet to make the tabernacle of the congregation, and the ark, and caused his shechinah to dwell in it; and the people of the house of Israel offered their offerings, and studied in the words of the law in the chamber (c) of the school of Moses their master, and in the chamber of Joshua, the son of Nun, his minister.

Verse 5. I charge you, &c.] When the seven nations (d) heard that the children of Israel were about

(a) The same is mentioned in the Targums of Jon. and Jerus. in Exod. xxxii. 25. By this holy crown seems to be meant the shechinah or presence of God, and so it is explained in Shirhashirim Rabba in chap. iv. 12; or else the law, which is very frequently called so, Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 4. Midrash Kohelet in c. 7, 1. Pirke. Aboth. c. 4, s. 13.

(b) These are also supposed to be intended by the watchmen in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi and R. Ahen Ezra in loc.

(c) It was a common practice with the Jewish doctors to teach, dispute, and converse about religion in chambers or upper rooms. See Mishna Tract. Shabbath. c. 1, s. 4.

(d) The Hittites, the Gergashites, the Amorites, the Canaanites, the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites, Deut. vii. 1.

to possess their land, they arose as one man, and cut down the trees, and stopped up the fountains of water, and destroyed their cities, and fled. The holy blessed God said to Moses the prophet, I have sworn to their fathers, that I will bring their children to inherit a land flowing with milk and honey; but how shall I bring them to a land that is desolate and empty? Now, therefore, I will cause them to stay forty years in the wilderness, and my law shall be mixed with them, and after that those wicked nations shall build what they have destroyed. And then said Moses to the children of Israel, I charge you, O congregation of Israel, by the Lord of hosts, and by the fortresses of the land of Israel, that ye presume not to go up to the land of Canaan until the forty years are ended. When it shall be the good pleasure of the Lord to deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hands, then shall ye pass over Jordan, and the land shall be subdued before you.

Verse 6. Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness, &c.] When the Israelites came up out of the wilderness, and passed over Jordan with Joshua the son of Nun, the people of the land said, Who is this choice nation which comes up out of the wilderness, perfumed with the sweet incense, and supported through the righteousness of Abraham, who worshipped and prayed before the Lord on Mount Moriah, and is anointed with the anointing oil, through the righteousness of Isaac, who was bound in that place of the sanctuary which is called the mountain of frankincense; for whom wonders are also wrought through the holiness of Jacob, who wrestled with him until the morning ascended, and prevailed over him, and was delivered, he and the twelve tribes?

Verse 7. Behold his bed, which is Solomon's, &c.] When Solomon, the king of Israel, built the house of the sanctuary of the Lord in Jerusalem, the Lord said by his word, How beautiful is the house of this sanctuary, which is built for me by the hands of King Solomon, the son of David! and how beautiful are the priests, when they spread their hands, and stand upon their desks, and bless the people of the house of Israel

(c) The same is mentioned in Shirhashirim Rabba in loc., and in Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 11. There being just this number of letters in the forms of blessings with which the priests were to bless the people of Israel, in Num. vi. 24, 25, 26.

(f) The law is likewise compared to a sword, in Bereshith Rabba, Parash. 21. See Eph. vi. 17. Heb. iv. 12.

(g) The apostle Paul calls circumcision σημειον περιτομης, σημαδια της δικαιοσυνης της πιστεως, "the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of faith," Rom. iv. 11.

(h) So this "fear in the night" is interpreted by some of the rabbins in Shirhashirim Rabba in loc., and in Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 11. Though others of them in the said places explain it of the fear of hell, which is like to the night; as they do also in Genara Rab. Tract. Sanhedrin, c. 1, fol. 7, col. 1.

(i) By this chariot R. Aben Ezra also understands the house of the Lord; and in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi in loc., it is interpreted of the tabernacle, as it is by some of the Jews, in Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 12, though others think the ark is intended; and others in the same place would have the world meant, which way they explain it in Zohar in Gen. fol. 2, 1. The word אשרית very properly signifies "the marriage bed," so called from פיה which signifies "to sanctify," or "to be fruitful." Hence לבושת אשרית is a very

by the sixty letters (e) which were delivered to Moses their master, and with that blessing which surrounds them like a high and strong wall, and by which all the mighty men of Israel prevail and prosper!

Verse 8. They all hold swords, &c.] And the priests and the Levites, and all the tribes of Israel, all of them take hold of the words of the law, which are like to a (f) sword, in which they employ themselves as men that are expert in war; and every one of them has the (g) seal of circumcision sealed upon their flesh, even as it was sealed upon the flesh of Abraham; and by it they prevail as a man that has his sword girt upon his thigh, wherefore they are not afraid of noxious spirits (h) and apparitions, which walk in the night.

Verse 9. King Solomon made himself a chariot, &c.] King Solomon built for himself (i) a holy temple of the trees of (k) Zangebila, fir trees, and cedars, which came from Lebanon, and covered it with pure gold.

Verse 10. He made the pillars thereof, &c.] And after that he had finished it, he put in the midst of it the ark of the testimony, which is the pillar of the world; and in it the two tables of stone, which Moses placed there in Horeb, which are more precious than silver purified, and more beautiful than the best gold; and he spread and covered over it (l) the veil of blue and purple, and between the cherubims which are over the mercy-seat the shechinah of the Lord abode, whose name dwelleth in Jerusalem, above all the cities of the land of Israel.

Verse 11. Go forth, O ye daughters of Zion, &c.] When King Solomon came to make the dedication of the house of the sanctuary, a crier went forth in strength; and thus he said, Go forth and see, ye inhabitants of the provinces of the land of Israel, and ye people of Zion, the crown and diadem wherewith the people of the house of Israel crowned King Solomon in the (m) day of the dedication of the house of the sanctuary, when he rejoiced with the joy of the feast of tabernacles; for king Solomon kept at that time the feast of tabernacles (n) fourteen days.

usual phrase with the rabbins to express the celebration of marriage. Vide Buxtorf. epist. Heb. lib. 2, ep. 7.

(k) Elias Levita, in his Methurgeman on this word, says that this is cinnabar. He seems to mean a kind of red wood, which dyers use; but observes, that some say it is the spice we call ginger. So David de Pomis renders it in his Lex. Heb. fol. 54, 4; and indeed it is joined with pepper in Maimon. Tract. Shebitat Asur, c. 2, s. 6. Biath. Hamikdash, c. 7, s. 13, and Beracoth, c. 8, s. 7. It is most likely to be a kind of cedar.

(l) Vide Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 12. Shirhashirim Rabba, and Jarchi in loc.

(m) Most of the Jewish writers refer this to the time of the giving of the law on Mount Sinai, and the setting up of the tabernacle by Moses; so Jarchi and Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. Shemoth Rabba, Parash. 52. Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 20, Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 2 and 12. Prefat. Echa. Rabbati. fol. 21, 2.

(n) In 1 Kings viii. 65, it is said that "Solomon held a feast seven days and seven days, even fourteen days;" the reason of which distinction is because the first seven days were kept for the dedication of the altar, and the other for the feast of tabernacles; see 2 Chron. vii. 8, 9; whereas our Targumist would have the feast of tabernacles kept the whole fourteen days, contrary to the command in Lev. xxiii. 34. Vide R. Levi Ben Gerson, and R. David Kimchi in 1 Reg. viii. 65.

CHAPTER IV.

Verse 1. Behold, thou art fair, &c.] And in that day King Solomon offered up a (a) a thousand burnt-offerings upon the altar, and his offerings were graciously accepted by the Lord. Bath Kol (b) went forth from heaven; and thus it said, How fair art thou, O congregation of Israel, and how fair are the princes of the congregation and the wise men, (c) who sit in the sanhedrin, who enlighten (d) the world; the people of the house of Israel, and are like to young doves; yea, even the rest of the children of thy congregation; and the people of the earth are righteous, as the sons of Jacob, (e) who gathered stones, and made a heap thereof on the mount of Gilead!

Verse 2. Thy teeth are like, &c.] How fair are the priests and Levites, who offer up thine offerings, and eat the holy flesh, and the tithes, and the offering of fruits; and are pure from all oppression and rapine, even as clean as Jacob's flocks of sheep when they were shorn, and came up from the brook (f) Jabok, among whom there was no oppression or rapine, and they are all of them like to one another, and always bear twins; neither is any barren, or that miscarieth among them.

Verse 3. Thy lips are like a thread, &c.] And the lips of the high priest inquire in prayer, on the day of atonement, before the Lord; and his words turn the transgressions of Israel, which are like to a thread of scarlet, and make them white (g) as pure wool; and the king, who is their head, is full of the commandments, as a pomegranate; besides the (h) Amarcalin and (i) Archonin, who are next the king, who are righteous; neither is there any iniquity in them.

Verse 4. Thy neck is like the tower, &c.] And the head of the school, who is thy master, is powerful in righteousness, and mighty in good works, as David king of Israel, by the word of whose mouth the world is restored, who in the doctrine of the law employs himself; in which the people of the house of Israel placing their confidence, overcome in war, as if they held in their hands all kinds of warlike instruments of mighty men.

Verse 5. Thy two breasts, &c.] Thy two Redeemers which shall redeem thee; (k) Messiah the son of David, and Messiah the son of Ephraim, are like to Moses and Aaron, the sons of Jochebed, who may be compared to young roes that are twins; who by their righteousness fed the people of the house of Israel forty years in the wilderness with manna, and with fatted fowls, and water of (l) the well of Miriam.

Verse 6. Until the day break, &c.] And all the time that the house of Israel held fast in their hands the religion of their righteous fathers, they drove away those noxious spirits that walk in the night-time, or in the morning, or at noonday; because that the shechinah of the glory of the Lord dwelt in the house of the sanctuary, which was built on Mount Moriah; for all the noxious and destroying spirits fled at the smell of the sweet incense.

Verse 7. Thou art all fair, &c.] And when thy people, the house of Israel do the will of the Lord of the world, he praises them in the highest heavens; and thus he saith, Thou art art all fair, O congregation of Israel, and there is no (m) spot in thee.

Verse 8. Come with me from Lebanon, &c.] The Lord said by his word, Dwell with me, O congregation of Israel, who art like to a modest (n) damsel, and

(a) In 1 Kings viii. 63, the sacrifice of peace-offerings which Solomon offered was two and twenty thousand oxen, and a hundred and twenty thousand sheep: but the number of burnt-offerings is not mentioned.

(b) See note on chap. ii. 14.

(c) So the words are explained in Shirhashirim Rabba, in loc. Matt. v. 14.

(d) This refers to the account that is given of what passed between Jacob and Laban, in Gen. xxxi. 46, 47. See Jarchi in loc.

(e) This is the ford Jacob passed over with his wives and children, when he went out to meet his brother Esau, Gen. xxxii. 22. Mention is made of it in several other places of Scripture: Deut. ii. 37, and iii. 16; Josh. xii. 2.

(f) The Jews say, that when the scape-goat was sent into the wilderness, a scarlet thread was tied to the temple door, which, as soon as the goat was arrived in the wilderness, turned white; which was not only a token to them of its arrival there, but was also an indication of their sins being forgiven; as it is said, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow," Isa. i. 18. See Mishna, Tract. Yoma, c. 6. s. 8, and Ez Chayim, ibid. This scarlet thread, they say, ceased turning white forty years before the destruction of the temple, which was about the time Jesus Christ, who was typified by the scape-goat, made atonement for sin; Talmud Yoma, fol. 39, col. 2. This tradition the Targumist seems to have in view here.

(h) These officers were of the tribe of Levi, Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 3. Their number was never less than seven; their work was to take the care and charge of the keys of the court; and one might not open the door unless all seven were present, Mishna, Tract. Shekalim, c. 5. s. 2 Maimon.

Hilch. Cele Hamikdash, c. 4, s. 17. Jarchi in 2 Reg. xii. 9; though Kimchi, in 2 Reg. xii. 9, and xxii. 4, thinks that they were treasurers, who had the charge of the public money. The etymology given of this word is very different. Baal Aruch says this officer was so called because he was מַרְכָּס מַרְכָּס mar al haccol, "lord over all:" the same is given in Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 5, where Shebna the treasurer, Isa. xxii. 15, is said to be one of those officers. Elias Levita, in his Methurgeman, says he was so called because אָמַר עוֹל amar col, "he said" or "prescribed" all things.

(i) This is from the Greek word Ἀρχων, and signifies princes, rulers, or governors.

(k) The Jews, observing different characters given of the Messiah, which they think irreconcilable in one person, have feigned two Messiahs; the one they call Messiah the son of David, who shall be a potent, prosperous, and victorious prince; the other, Messiah the son of Ephraim, or Joseph, as he is sometimes called, who shall be exposed to many hardships and sufferings, and at last die in the war of Gog and Magog. Of these two Messiahs, see Talmud, Succah, fol. 52, col. 1. Zohar in Num. fol. 68, 3; 82, 2; 99, 4; and 101, 2. Jarchi in Isa. xxiv. 18. Kimchi, Jarchi, and Aben Ezra in Zech. xii. 10.

(l) It is an opinion which obtains among the Jews, that on account of the merits of Moses the manna was given; and on the account of those of Aaron, the clouds of glory; and for the sake of Miriam, the well of water, which they say they enjoyed all the forty years they were in the wilderness. Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 1 and 13. Targum Jon. and Jarchi in Num. xx. 2.

(m) Or plague.

(n) Here the Greek word νύμφη is used, as it is also in verses 9, 10, 11, 12, and chap. v. 1.

go up with me to the house of the sanctuary, where the heads of the people, which dwell by the river of (o) Amana, and the inhabitants that reside on the top of Mount (p) Talga, and the people which are in Hermon, shall bring gifts unto thee; and they that inhabit the strong fortified cities, which are as powerful as lions, shall pay tribute to thee; yea, an offering shall be brought from the cities of the mountains, which are mightier than the leopards.

Verse 9. Thou hast ravished my heart, &c.] Fixed upon the (g) table of my heart is thy love, O my sister, the congregation of Israel, who art like to a modest damsel; fixed upon the table of my heart is the love of the least of thy children, who is righteous as one of the great men of the sanhedrin, as one of the kings (r) of the house of Judah, on whose neck the crown of the kingdom is put.

Verse 10. How fair is thy love, &c.] How fair is thy love to me, my sister, the congregation of Israel, who art like to a modest damsel! How excellent is thy love to me, more than the (s) seventy nations; and the good (t) report of thy righteous ones is more excellent than all spices!

Verse 11. Thy lips, O my spouse, &c.] And when the priests pray in the holy court, their lips drop as the honey-comb; and so does thy tongue, O thou modest damsel, when thou deliverest songs and hymns, sweet as milk and honey; and the smell of the (u) priests' garments is as the smell of Lebanon.

Verse 12. A garden enclosed, &c.] Thy women,

(o) This was one of the rivers of Damascus; see 2 Kings v. 12, where it is read Abana: but both the Masora and Targum read it Amana; and Kimchi thinks it was called by both names.

(p) Or "the mountain of snow." Elias Levita, in his Methurgeman, says that Mount Shenir was called so: perhaps Mount Salmun may be meant, which had snow continually upon it; see Psa. lxxviii. 14. and R. Aben Ezra, ibid.

(q) Compare with this 2 Cor. iii. 3.

(r) Many of the kings of the house of Judah were holy and good men; so Aben Ezra in loc.

(s) See note in chap. i. 2.

(t) So Jarchi in loc.

(u) Vide Jarchi in loc.

(v) It was an ancient opinion of the Jews, that the ministry of angels was used in carrying the souls of saints to heaven. Thus in Debarim Rabbah, Parash. 11, several angels are ordered by God to bring the soul of Moses to him. Agreeably to this notion, it is said in Luke xvi. 22, that "the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom."

(w) It was very usual with the Eastern people to keep their virgins, especially those of note and esteem, very recluse, and not admit them to public or common conversation; but oblige them to abide much within doors. Hence they are called in the Hebrew language עַלְמִיּוֹת, from the word עָלַם, which signifies to hide or cover, because they were not exposed to public view; wherefore the author of the second book of Maccabees calls them κατακλειστρον παρθενον, "virgins that were shut up;" i. e., in the houses of their parents, in private chambers, as the Targumist here says. See 2 Macc. iii. 19.

(x) Regard seems to be had to the river which went out of Eden, mentioned in Gen. ii. 10, and was parted into four heads or rivers, the names of which were Pison, Gihon, Hiddekel, and Euphrates. The Cabalists suppose a great many mysteries to be contained therein; see Zohar in Gen. fol. 85, 2; in Exod. fol. 34, 3; 37, 2, and in Lev. fol. 24, 3, where the name of this river is said to be Jobel, according to Jer. xvii. 8; and so it is in Vajikra Rabbah, Parash. 22, and in Bemidbar Rabbah, Parash. 21.

(y) See Isa viii. 6, and Aben Ezra upon it, who expounds which are married to modest men, are as a modest damsel, and as the garden of Eden, into which no man hath power to enter except the righteous, whose souls are by angels (v) carried into it; and thy virgins are hid and concealed (w) in private chambers, and are sealed up because they are as a fountain of living water, which comes forth from under the tree, and is parted to the four heads (x) of the rivers: but if it is sealed with the great and holy name, it goes forth and flows, and overflows all the world.

Verse 13. Thy plants are an orchard, &c.] And thy young men are full of thy commands, as pomegranates, and love their wives, and beget children as righteous as themselves; and their smell, therefore, is as the excellent spices of the garden of Eden, even camphires with nards.

Verse 14. Spikenard with saffron, &c.] Nard, and saffron, and calamus, and cinnamon, with all trees of frankincense, pure myrrh, and lign aloes, with all kinds of spices.

Verse 15. A fountain of gardens, &c.] And the waters of Siloah (y) go softly, with the rest of the waters which flow from Lebanon, to water the land of Israel, for the sake of those who study in the words of the law, which are like to a well of living water; and on the account of the righteousness (z) of pouring of water, which they pour upon the altar in the house of the sanctuary, that is built in Jerusalem, which is called (a) Lebanon.

Verse 16. Awake, O north wind, &c.] And at the the text in Isaiah by this in Canticles. Jarchi, in Isa. viii. 6, says the name of this fountain was Gihon. In the New Testament it is called Siloam, John ix. 7, 11: it was a fountain near Jerusalem, Neh. iii. 15.

(z) The paraphrast refers here to a ceremony used at the feast of tabernacles, when the people fetched water from Siloam, and brought it to the priest, who poured it upon the altar with the wine of the daily sacrifice; this they say Moses received from God at Mount Sinai, though it is not written. This ceremony of drawing and pouring water at those times was attended with all the demonstrations of joy imaginable, as shouting, leaping, dancing, singing, blowing of trumpets, throwing of citrons, illumination of houses, &c.; inasmuch that they say, that those who never saw the rejoicing of drawing water never saw rejoicing in their lives, Mishna, Tract. Succa, c. 4, s. 9, 10, and c. 5, s. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5; Jarchi and Ez Chayim, ibid.; Maimon, Tract. Tamid, c. 10, s. 6, 7, 8; Cele Hamikdash, c. 7, s. 8, and c. 8, s. 6. They fancied the Holy Ghost was much delighted with this vain joy of theirs; nay, that in drawing water they drew him, i. e., procured his descent upon them, and abode with them as a spirit of prophecy, which they say Jonah obtained at this time and in this way; and, therefore, whilst they were performing this ceremony, frequently used those words in Isa. xii. 3: "With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation;" which they understand of the Holy Ghost, Bereshith Rabbah, Parash. 70. Midrash Ruth, fol. 32, 2. Jarchi and Ez Chayim in Mishna, ubi supra. To this ceremony Christ is thought to allude, "when in the last day, the great day of this feast of tabernacles, he stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink: he that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water: but this spake he of the Spirit," &c. John vii. 37, 38, 39. Vide Tremell., ibid.

(a) So the temple is called in Zech. xi. 1: "Open thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars," according to the mind of several Jewish interpreters, who, out of Talmud Yoma, fol. 39, 2, relate, that forty years before the destruction of the temple the doors thereof opened of themselves; at which Jochanan Ben Zaccai being affrighted, said, O temple, temple, now know I that thy destruction is at hand;

north side (b) was a table, and upon it (c) twelve loaves of shew-bread, and at the south side (d) was the lamp to give light; and upon the altar the priests offered up the offerings, and caused the sweet incense to ascend from thence. The congregation of Israel said, Let the merciful God come into the house of the sanctuary, and graciously accept the offerings of his people.

for so prophesied Zechariah, the son of Iddo, of thee, Open thy doors, &c. Vide R. Abendam. Not. in Micol Yophi; Jarchi and Kimchi in Zech. xi. 1.

CHAPTER V.

Verse 1. I am come into my garden, &c.] The holy blessed God said unto his people, the house of Israel, I am come into the house of my sanctuary, which thou hast built for me, O my sister, the congregation of Israel, who art like to a modest damsel: I have caused my shechinah to dwell with thee, (a) I have received thy sweet incense, which thou hast made on my account; I have sent fire from heaven, and it hath devoured the burnt-offerings, and the holy drink-offerings; the libation of the red and white wine is graciously received by me, which the priests pour out upon mine altar. Now, therefore, come, ye priests that love my commandments, and eat what is left of the offerings, and delight yourselves with those good things which are prepared for you.

Verse 2. I sleep, but my heart waketh, &c.] After all these words the people of the house of Israel sinned, and he delivered them into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, who carried them into captivity; and they were in captivity like a man asleep, that cannot be awakened out of his sleep; wherefore the Holy Ghost warned them by the prophets, and awakened them out of the sleep of their hearts. Then answered the Lord of the whole world, and thus he said, Return by repentance, open thy mouth, rejoice and show forth my praise, my sister, my love, O congregation of Israel, who art like to a dove for the perfection of thy works; for the hair of my head is filled with thy tears, as a man the hair of whose head is wet with the dew of heaven; and my Nazaritical locks are filled with the drops of thine eyes, as a man whose Nazaritical locks are full of the drops of rain which descend in the night.

Verse 3. I have put off my coat, &c.] The congregation of Israel answered in the presence of the prophets, Behold, now have I removed from me the (b) yoke of his commandments, and have served the idols of the nations; wherefore, how can I have the face to return to him again? The Lord of the world answered them by the prophets, saying, And behold, now I also have removed my shechinah from thee; and how shall I return again, seeing thou hast done evil works? for I have washed my feet from thine uncleanness, and how shall I defile them in the midst of thee with thy evil works?

Verse 4. My beloved put in his hand, &c.] When it appeared manifest before the Lord that the people of the house of Israel would not repent and turn unto him, he stretched forth (c) his mighty arm against the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh, on the other side of Jordan; and he delivered them into the hand of Sennacherib, the king of Assyria, who carried them into captivity, (d) to Lachlach, and Chabor, and to the rivers of Gozan, and cities of Media; and he took out of their hands the molten calf which Jeroboam, the wicked, set in Lesham-Dan, which was called (e) Pamiash, in the days of Pekah, the son of Remaliah; and when I heard it, my bowels were moved towards them.

Verse 5. I rose up to open to my beloved, &c.] And when the mighty stroke of the Lord lay heavy upon me, I repented of my works; and the priests offered up offerings, and burnt the sweet incense: but it was not graciously received, for the Lord of the world shut the (f) doors of repentance to my face.

Verse 6. I opened to my beloved, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, I was willing to seek instruction from the Lord: but he removed his shechinah from me, and my soul desired the voice of his words. I sought the shechinah of his glory: but I found it not. I prayed before him: but he covered the heavens with (g) clouds, and did not receive my prayer.

Verse 7. The watchmen that went about the city,

(a) These words are similarly paraphrased in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi in loc., and in Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 13.

(b) See note on chap. i. 10.

(c) Chald. The stroke of his might.

(d) See 2 Kings xvii. 6, and xviii. 11; 1 Chron. v. 26.

(e) Leshem being taken by the tribe of Dan, Josh. xix. 47, they called it Dan, after the name of their father; and it seems it was also called Pamiash. Both Baal Aruch, and David de Pomis, say that פמיה Pamiash was a cave at the head of the river Jordan: and it is asserted by several of the rabbins, that Jordan took its rise from hence, who therefore say that the river was so called, שיעור מדר sheiyored mid-dan, "because it descended from Dan," i. e., from Leshem, Dan, or Pamiash, Talmud Baba Bathra, fol. 74, col. 2; and Bechoroth, fol. 55. col. 1; Jarchi in Deut. xxxiii. 23; Kim-chi in Jos. xix. 47. This in Bereshith Rabba, Parash. 63, is called פמיה Pamiash, as it is also by Josephus, and no doubt is the same which Pliny, in Nat. Hist. l. 5, c. 18, calls Pamiash, who also makes mention in c. 15 of a fountain of the same name, from whence he says the river Jordan sprung. The same is observed by Solinus, in his Polyhistor. c. 48, who calls it by the name of Pamiash. Eusebius, in his Eccl. Hist. l. 7, c. 17, says that the Phenicians called Cæsarea Philippi Pamiash, and speaks of a mountain called Pamiash, from whence the river Jordan has its original.

(f) In Shirhashirim Rabba, in chap. 5, 2, mention is made of פתח של תשובה "the gate of repentance," which the Lord desired the Israelites to open to him. Agreeably to this phrase, it is observed, in Acts xiv. 27, that "God had opened unto the Gentiles θύραν πίστεως, the door of faith."

(g) See Lam. iii. 44.

4c.] The (h) Chaldeans, which kept the ways, and besieged the city of Jerusalem all around, joined themselves to me. Some they slew with the sword, and others they carried into captivity. They took the crown royal off the neck of Zedekiah king of Judah, and carried him away to Ribla, (i) where the people of Babylon, who besieged the city and kept the walls, put out his eyes.

Verse 8. I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, 4c.] The congregation of Israel said, I charge you, O ye prophets, by the decree of the word of the Lord, that, if your love manifests himself unto you, you tell him that I, who love him, am sick of love.

Verse 9. What is thy beloved, 4c.] The prophets answered and said, unto the house of Israel, (k) Who is this God thou art seeking to worship, O congregation of Israel, who art fairer than all the nations? Who is this thou art desirous to fear, that thou dost so charge us?

Verse 10. My beloved is white and ruddy, 4c.] Wherefore the congregation of Israel began to speak in the praise of the Lord of the world, and thus she said, That God I desire to serve, who in the day is covered with a garment (l) white as snow, (m) and the brightness of the glory of the Lord, whose face shines as fire, because of the greatness of wisdom and knowledge, for he is making new things every day, and will manifest them to his people in the (n) great day, and his banner is over ten thousand times ten thousand angels, who minister before him.

Verse 11. His head is as the most fine gold, 4c.]

(h) Jarchi by these watchmen understands Nebuchadnezzar and his army. R. Aben Ezra, the kings of Greece. Shirhashirim Rabba, the tribe of Levi.

(i) See Jer. iii. 7, 9, 11.

(k) Vide Jarchi, and Shirhashirim Rabba in loc.

(l) So the Ancient of days is represented in Dan. vii. 9.

(m) In some exemplars these following words are inserted:—"And studies in the twenty-four books of the law, and in the words of prophecy, and in the Holy Writings, and in the night-time employs himself in the six parts of the Mishna," which Buxtorf has omitted in his Bible, though he makes mention of them in his Reconsio operis Talmud, p. 232; and indeed they greatly lessen the glory of the Divine Being, though they are designed to extol and magnify the Mishna or oral law.

(n) That is, the day of judgment, which in Jude. ver. 6, is called κρισις μεγάλης ημερας, "the judgment of the great day," when not only the hidden things of darkness and the counsels of the hearts will be made manifest, 1 Cor. iv. 5, but the judgments of God also, Rev. xv. 4.

(o) The same way the words are explained in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi in loc., and in Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 19. By this head R. Aben Ezra understands the throne of glory.

(p) That is, a variety or great multitude of them; for the Jews suppose the law may be interpreted various ways, and that there is not the least thing in it but what contains a great many mysteries. See notes on chap. i. 11.

(q) Vide Shirhashirim Rabba in loc.

(r) That is, they proceed in trying causes slowly and gradually, and not rashly and precipitately, being willing to search thoroughly into them, that they may do justice and pass a right sentence; this is one of the three things the men of the great congregation advised to in Pirke Aboth, c. 1, s. 1, where they say הדרן בדיקין הדרן haeru mittonin bedin, "Be slow in judgment, settle many disciples, and make a hedge for the law."

(s) So Jarchi by "his cheeks" understands the words of Mount Sinai

His law, (o) which is more desirable than the best gold, and the interpretation of the words thereof, in which are senses, (p) heaps upon heaps, and the commandments to them that keep them are white as snow; but to those that do not keep them are black as the wings of a raven.

Verse 12. His eyes are as the eyes of doves, 4c.] His eyes look continually (q) upon Jerusalem, to do good unto it, and to bless it, from the beginning of the year unto the end of the year, as doves which stand and look upon the water-courses, because of the righteousness of those who sit in the sanhedrin, who study in the law, and give light to a cause, that it may be smooth as milk; and they sit in the house of the school, and (r) wait in judgment until they have finished either for absolution or condemnation.

Verse 13. His cheeks are as a bed of spices, 4c.] The (s) two tables of stone which he gave unto his people are written in (t) ten lines, like to the rows of a spice garden, producing acute meanings and senses, even as a garden produces spices; and the lips of his wise men which study in the law, drop senses on every side, and the speech of their mouths is as the choice myrrh.

Verse 14. His hands are as gold rings, 4c.] The twelve tribes of Jacob his servants are included in the plate of the holy crown of gold, and are engraven upon the twelve (u) precious stones with the three fathers of the world, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Reuben is engraven on achmad, Simeon is engraven upon akik Levi is engraven on barkan and affran, Judah is en

(t) Every commandment was written in a distinct line by itself, five on one table and five on the other.

(u) In the same order are the names of the twelve tribes as engraven on so many precious stones, mentioned in Targum Jerus. in Exod. xxviii. 17, 18, 19, 20; in Shemoth Rabba, Parash. 38; and in Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 2. Though different names are given of the precious stones, the names of them in the Rabbots are the same with those in Exod. xxviii. In the Targum Jer. are Chaldee names, and in this paraphrase they are different from them. Reuben's stone was the sardius, Heb. odem, Onk. samkan, Jon. semuktha, Jerus. samkatha. It is so called by all those names from the redness of its colour; here it is called achmad, perhaps from חמדה chamad, because it is very desirable. Simeon's stone was the topaz, Heb. pitdah, Onk. yarkan, Jon. and Jerus. yarketha, because of its green colour; here it is called akik: but what gem is intended by it is not certain. Levi's stone was the carbuncle, Heb. barketh, Jon. and Jerus. barketha, and here barkan, and so in Onk.; and is so called because of its bright and glistering light. Judah's stone was the emerald, Heb. nophec, Onk. ismaragdin, Jon. ismorad: both seem to mean the smaragd. Jerus. cadcedana, or the chalcadony; here it is called cachale; it is thought to be the smaragd. See Eliae Levitæ Methurgeman, Buxtorf and Schindler in voce. Issachar's stone was the sapphire, Heb. saphir, Onk. shabze, Jon. sapphirinon, Jerus. sampuryana: all intend the sapphire; here it is called ismorad, or the smaragd. Zebulon's stone was the diamond, Heb. yahalom, Onk. sabhalon; it bears those names from the hardness of it. Jon. cadcodin or chalcadony, Jerus. cin eglā, the calves eye; here it is called gihar, which some think to be the jasper. See Buxtorf in voce. Dan's stone was the figure, Heb. leshem, Onk. kankire, Jon. kankirinun, Jerus. zuzin; here it is called birla, which seems to be the beryl. Naphtali's stone was the agate, Heb. shebo, Onk. yarkia, Jon. arkin, Jerus. birzalin; and here it is called espor, which may be thought to be the sapphire. Gad's stone was the amethyst, Heb. achlamah, Onk. and Jon. ein eglā, the calves eye, Jerus. smaragdin, the smaragd; and here it is called yabeag: but what graven on cachale, Issachar is engraven on ismorad, Zebulun is engraven on gihar, Dan is engraven on birla, Naphtali is engraven on esphor, Gad is engraven on tabeag, Asher is engraven on frozag, Joseph is engraven on meribag, Benjamin is engraven on apantor: these are like to the twelve celestial signs, shining as lamps, polished in their works like ivory, and bright as sapphires.

Verse 15. His legs are as pillars of marble, &c.] And the righteous they are the pillars of the world, set upon sockets of the best gold; these are (x) the words of the law, in which they study, and reprove the people of the house of Israel, that they may do is meant by it I know not. Asher's stone was the beryl, Heb. tarshish. Onk. Jon. and Jerus. crum yamma; here it is called frozag. Elias in his Methurgeman says, that a topaz, in the German language, is called frozam. Joseph's stone was the onyx, Heb. shoham, Onk. burla, Jon. berlevath; both seem to intend the beryl, Jerus. bdolcha or bdellium; here it is called meribag, which some take to be the onyx. See Buxtorf in voce. Benjamin's stone was the jasper, Heb. jashpeh, Jerus. margalita, a pearl, Onk. pantere, Jon. apanturin; and here apantor, which Elias in his Methurgeman says his will who is filled with compassion to them, as an old man; and makes the transgressions of the house of Israel as white as snow, and is ready to make victory and war among the nations who have transgressed his word, as a man who is strong and robust as the cedars.

Verse 16. His mouth is most sweet, &c.] The words of his mouth are sweet as honey, and all his commandments are more desirable to his wise men than gold and silver; this is the praise of God, who is my beloved, and this is the power of the mighty of the Lord, who is dear to me, O ye prophets who prophesy in Jerusalem.

is so called because it comes from Pontus; but rather because some sorts of jaspers are variegated and spotted like panthers. In the same order were the names of the twelve tribes engraven both upon the stones in the breastplate, and on the two onyx stones upon the shoulders of the ephod, according to Maimon, Tract. Cele Hamikdash. c. 9, s. 1, 7, 9.

(x) So these sockets of fine gold are explained in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi in loc., in Vajkra Rabba, Parash. 25, and in Benidbar Rabba, Parash. 10.

CHAPTER VI.

Verse 1. Whither is thy beloved gone, &c.] The prophets (a) replied, when they heard the praise of the Lord, from the mouth of the congregation of Israel, and thus they said, For what offence is the shechinah of the Lord removed from thee, O thou who art fairer in thy works than all the nations? and which way did thy beloved turn himself when he removed from thy sanctuary? The congregation of Israel said, Because of the sins, transgressions, and rebellion which were found in me. The prophets said, But now return by repentance, and let us arise, both thou and we, and we will pray before him, and seek mercy with thee.

Verse 2. My beloved is gone down into his garden, &c.] And the Lord of the world graciously received their prayer, and came down to the sanhedrin of the wise men at Babylon, and gave refreshment unto his people, and brought them out of their captivity by the hands of Cyrus, and Ezra, and Nehemiah, and Zerubabel the son of Shealtiel, and the elders of Judah; and they built the house of the sanctuary, and appointed priests over the offerings, and Levites over the charge of the holy commandment; and he sent fire from heaven and graciously received the offerings, and the sweet incense; and as a man supplies his own beloved son with dainties, so did he deliciously feed them; and as a man that gathereth roses out of the plains, so did he gather them out of Babylon.

Verse 3. I am my beloved's, &c.] And when I served the Lord of the world, who is my beloved, my beloved caused the holy shechinah to dwell with me, and he fed me with dainties.

Verse 4. Thou art beautiful, O my love, &c.] The Lord said by his word, How fair art thou, my love, when thou art willing to perform my pleasure! beautiful is the sanctuary which thou hast built for me instead of the former sanctuary, which Solomon, king in Jerusalem, built for me, and thy dread was upon all the people in the day that thy four (b) standards marched in the wilderness.

Verse 5. Turn away thine eyes from me, &c.] Set thy doctors, the wise men of the great congregation, in a circle over against me, for these (c) made me their king in the captivity, and fixed the school, for the teaching of my law, and the rest of thy nobles, and the people of the earth justified me by the word of their mouth, as the sons of Jacob, who gathered stones and made a heap (d) upon the mount of Gilead.

Verse 6. Thy teeth are as a flock of sheep, &c.] And the priests and Levites, who eat thine offerings, and the holy tithes, and the oblation of fruits, are pure from all oppression and rapine, for they are as clean as Jacob's flocks of sheep, when they came up from the brook (e) Jabok, for there is no oppression or rapine in them; but they are all of them like one another, and they always bear twins, neither is there any that miscarrieth or is barren among them.

Verse 7. As a piece of pomegranate, &c.] And the kingdom of the house of the Hasmonæans (f) are

(a) The persons here interrogating are said to be "the nations of the world," in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi in loc.

(b) Which were those of Judah, Reuben, Ephraim, and Dan. See Num. ii., and Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 2.

(c) So the word הרבנים is paraphrased in Shirhashirim Rabba in loc.

(d) See note on chap. iv. 1.

(e) See note on chap. iv. 2.

(f) Schindler, in his Lex. Pentaglot. fol. 680, says that Mattathias and his posterity were so called from השמון Hasmon, one of their ancestors, though I think there is no evidence of any of their ancestors being of that name. The Jewish writers pretty generally agree that they were so called from the word השמננים Hashmannim, which signifies princes or great persons; and is so used in Psa. lxxviii. 32; for they all of them full of the commandments, even as a pomegranate; besides Matthias the high priest, and his sons, who are more righteous than them all, who very eagerly established the commandments and the words of the law.

Verse 8. There are threescore queens, &c.] At that time the Grecians arose and gathered sixty kings of the children of (g) Esau, clothed with coats of mail, riding upon horses, being horsemen, and eighty dukes of the children of Ishmael, riding upon elephants, besides the rest of the nations and languages, of which there is no number; and they appointed King Alexander to be the general over them, and they came to make war against Jerusalem.

Verse 9. My dove, my undefiled, is but one, &c.] And at that time the congregation of Israel, which is like to an unblemished dove, was serving her Lord with a single heart, and was united to the law, and studied in the words of the law with a perfect heart, and her righteousness was as pure as in the day when she came out of Egypt. Lo, the sons of the Hasmoneans, and Matthias, and all the people of Israel, went forth and made war with them, and the Lord delivered them into their hands; which, when the inhabitants of the provinces saw, they blessed them, and the kingdoms of the earth, and the governors, and they praised them.

Verse 10. Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, &c.] The nations said, How splendid are the works of this people as the morning; fair are their young men as the moon, and their righteousness as had both the high priesthood and the princely government in their hands. So R. Aben Ezra, R. David Kunchi, and R. Sol. Ben Melec, in Psa. lxxviii. 32. David de Pomis, Lex. Heb. fol. 42, 1, and so likewise Scaliger de Emend. Temp. lib. 5, pp. 436, 437; who observes that Mattathias was never so called, nor was he a high priest, though the Targumist here calls him so, but a common priest of the course of Jehoiarib, and of the town of Moddin; (see 1 Mac. ii. 1;) and that this family began to be called by the name of the Hasmoneans, from the times of Simon Hyrcanus, who was both high priest and prince of the Jewish nation, which kind of government continued in that family unto the times of Herod the Great, who destroyed both it and them; and this well agrees with what the paraphrast here says, who manifestly distinguishes the kingdom of the house of the Hasmoneans from Mattathias and his sons, i. e., Judas Maccabæus and Jonathan. Of these Hasmoneans, Jarchi and Aben Ezra explain the 10th and 12th verses of this chapter.

(g) Vide Aben Ezra and Jarchi in loc., and Bemidbar Bar-clear as the sun; and their dread was upon all the inhabitants of the earth, as in the time their (h) four standards marched in the wilderness!

Verse 11. I went down into the garden of nuts, &c.] The Lord of the world said, concerning the second (i) temple, which was built (k) by the hands of Cyrus, I will cause my shechinah to dwell there, to behold the good works of my people, and see whether the wise men, who are like to a vine, multiply and increase, and whether their branches are full of good works, as the pomegranates.

Verse 12. Or ever I was aware, &c.] And when it appeared manifest before the Lord that they were righteous, and studied in the law, the Lord said by his word, I will not humble them any more, yea, I will not consume them: but will consult with myself to do them good, and to set them, even their excellent ones, in the chariots of (l) kings, because of the worthiness of the righteous of that generation, who are like in their works to Abraham their father.

Verse 13. Return, return, O Shulamite, &c.] Return unto me, O congregation of Israel, return unto Jerusalem; return unto the house of the doctrine of the law; return to receive the prophecy from the prophets, who have prophesied in the name of the word of the Lord; for what is your goodness, ye lying prophets, to make the people of Jerusalem go astray by your prophecies? for ye speak perverse things against the word of the Lord, to profane the camp of Israel and Judah.

ba, Parash. 14, where those sixty queens and eighty concubines are interpreted of the sons of Noah, Abraham, Ham, Ishmael, and Esau.

(h) See note on ver. 4.

(i) So Jarchi interprets this "garden of nuts;" though some of the rabbins in Shirhashirim Rabba think the world is meant; and by the vine, the schools and synagogues; and by the pomegranates, the students in the law.

(k) It is said to be built by Cyrus, because he gave the Jews liberty and encouragement to build it; see Ezra i. 2, 3, 4.

(l) In Shirhashirim Rabba in loc, these words are referred to the deliverance of the Israelites out of Egypt, and their exaltation over the nations in the land of Canaan; to the raising of David to the throne of Israel, after he had been persecuted by Saul; and to the advancement of Mordecai to great dignity in Babylon, after his mourning in sackcloth and ashes; all which are represented as severally surprising to them.

CHAPTER VII.

Verse 1. How beautiful are thy feet with shoes, &c.] Solomon said, by the spirit of prophecy from the Lord, How beautiful are the feet of the Israelites, when they come up to appear before the Lord (a) three times a year, in sandals of badger skin, and offer up their vows and free-will offerings; and their sons which come out of their loins are fair as the geras which were fixed upon the holy (b) crown that Bezaleel the artificer made for Aaron the priest.

Verse 2. Thy navel is like a round goblet, &c.] And the head of thy school, by whose righteousness all the world is nourished, even as the fetus receives its nourishment through its navel, in its mother's bowels; who shines in the law as the orb of the

(a) That is, at the feast of the passover, at the feast of weeks or pentecost, and at the feast of tabernacles; see Exod. xxiii. 14, 15, 16, 17; 2 Chron. viii. 13. So the words are explained in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi in loc.

(b) So the plate of gold was called, on which was inscribed "holiness to the Lord," which was fixed to the fore-front of the mitre on Aaron's forehead; see Exod. xxviii. 36, and xxxix. 30. This plate was two fingers broad, and reached moon, when he comes to pronounce pure or unclean, to justify or condemn; neither do the words of the law ever fail from his mouth, even as the waters of the great river, which proceeds from Eden, never (c) fail; and the seventy wise men are round about him, as a round (d) floor, whose treasures are full of the holy tithes, and vows, and free-will offerings which Ezra the priest, and Zerubbabel, and Joshua, and Nehemiah, and Mordecai Bilshan, men of the great (e) congregation who are like to roses, decreed for them, because they had strength to study in the law day and night.

Verse 3. Thy two breasts are like two young roes, &c.] Thy (f) two Redeemers which shall redeem thee, Messiah, the son of David, and Messiah, the son of Ephraim, are like to Moses and Aaron, the sons of Jochebed, who may be compared to two young roes that are twins.

Verse 4. Thy neck is as a tower of ivory, &c.] And (g) the father of the house of judgment, who determines thy causes, is mighty over thy people to bind them, and to bring him forth who is condemned in judgment, even to bring him forth, as Solomon the king, who made a tower of ivory, and subjected the people of the house of Israel, and returned them to the Lord of the world. Thy scribes are full of wisdom, as pools of water; and they know how to number the computations of the (h) intercalations; and they intercalate the years, and fix the beginning of the months and the beginning of the years at the gate of the house of the great sanhedrin, and the chief of the house of Judah is like to David the king, who built the fortress of Zion, which is called the tower of Lebanon, from ear to ear; "holiness to the Lord" was written upon it in great letters, standing out, and that either in one line or in two lines; if in two lines, "holiness" was written below, and "to the Lord" above; Maimon. Hilch. Cele Hamikdash, c. 9, s. 1, 2; Ceseoph Mishna in ibid., and Jarchi in Exod. xxviii. 36.

(c) The same is said of them in Zohar in Exodus, fol. 34, 3, and xxxviii. 2: see Gen. ii. 10, and note on chapter iv. 12.

(d) The great sanhedrin consists of seventy persons, besides the nasi or prince, at whose right hand sat Ab Beth Din, or the father of the house of judgment: before them sat the two scribes, and the rest of the sanhedrin took their places according to their age or dignity, and sat in a semicircular form, or, as they express it, כחצוי גורר עגולה, cachatsi goren agullah, "as the half of a round corn floor," to which they compare this assembly. So that both the prince and father of the court could see them all, Mishna Tract. Sanhedrin, c. 4, s. 3. Jarchi and Ez Chayim, ibid. Maimon. Hilch. Sanhedrin, c. 1, s. 3, and Ceseoph Mishna, ibid. Shemoth Rabba, Parash. 5. Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 11. R. Aben Ezra in loc. Midrash Echa Rabba Præfat. fol. 38, 4. Midrash Kohelet in chap. i. 11.

(e) This was the sanhedrin or great council, collected by Ezra the scribe, after the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, of which he was president. This assembly consisted of one hundred and twenty persons, of which these here mentioned were the chief. There are others reckoned with them by some, as the three prophets, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, with Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, Azariah, Seraiah, Relaiash, Mispar, Bigvai, Rehum, and Baanah: the last of this venerable body of men, they say, was Simeon the Just; who, about forty years after the building of the second temple, met Alexander the Great coming against Jerusalem, and appeased him. These men were called אנשי כנסת הגדולה, anshey keneseth haggedolah, "the men of the great congregation," because they restored the law to its pristine glory, and on which, whoever stands, may number (i) all the towers that are in Damascus.

Verse 5. Thine head upon thee is like Carmel, &c.] The king who is set over thee, a righteous head, is as (k) Elijah the prophet, who was jealous with a jealousy for the Lord of heaven, and slew the false prophets in the mount of Carmel, and reduced the people of the house of Israel to the fear of the Lord God; and the poor of the people, which go with a bowed-down head because they are poor, shall be clothed in purple, as Daniel was clothed in the city of Babylon, and Mordecai in Shushan, because of the righteousness of Abraham, who long before consulted the Lord of the world; and because of Isaac, whom his father bound in order to offer him up; and because of the holiness of Jacob, who pilled the rods in the gutters.

Verse 6. How fair and how pleasant art thou, &c.] King Solomon said, How beautiful art thou, O congregation of Israel, when thou bearest upon thee the yoke of my kingdom, when I correct thee with chastisements for thy transgressions, and thou bearest them in love, and they appear in thy sight as delicious dainties.

Verse 7. This thy stature is like to a palm tree, &c.] And when thy priests (l) spread their hands in prayer, and bless their brethren, the house of Israel, their four hands are separated like the branches of the palm tree, and their stature is as the date; and thy congregations stand face to face over against the priests, and their faces are bowed to the earth like a cluster of grapes.

Verse 8. I said, I will go up to the palm tree, &c.] purged the Jewish Church from those corruptions which had crept into it during the captivity in Babylon. They are said to have received the oral law from the prophets, who had received it from the elders, and they from Joshua, and Joshua from Moses, and to have transmitted it down to posterity, Pirke Aboth, c. 1, s. 1, 2, and Jarchi, ibid. Maimon. Præfat. in lib. Yad. Vide Buxtorffii Tiberiad. in c. 10.

(f) See note on chap. iv. 5.

(g) See note on ver. 2.

(h) The Jewish year consisted of twelve lunar months, and sometimes they intercalated a thirteenth month, which they called Veadar, or the second Adar, which was always done by the direction and at the pleasure of the sanhedrin; as also the fixing of the beginning of the months, by the phasis or first appearance of the moon, Maimon. Hilch. Kiddush Hachodesh, c. 1, s. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6; c. 4, s. 1, 9, 10, 11, 13, and c. 5, s. 1, 2, 3, 4. The men of the tribe of Issachar were famous for their knowledge in these things, Bereshith Rabba, Parash. 72, Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 13. Midrash Esth. Parash. 4, and Kinchi in 1 Chron. xii. 32.

(i) Jarchi relates out of the Midrash, that from the house of the forest of Lebanon, which Solomon built, a man might number all the houses which were in Damascus.

(k) So these words are paraphrased in Shirhashirim Rabba in loc., and in Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 31.

(l) When the priests blessed the people, they stretched out their hands and lifted them above their heads, with their fingers spread out; only the high priest never lifted up his above the plate of gold upon the mitre; and though, at the time of blessing, the priests and people stood face to face, right over against each other, yet the priests never looked upon the people, but kept their eyes upon the ground, as in the time of prayer; nor might the people look in the faces of the priests, lest their minds should be disturbed thereby; which ceremony the Targumist here refers to, Maimon. Hilch. Tephila, c. 14, s. 3, 7, 9. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 11. Targum Jon. in Num. vi. 23.

The Lord said by his word, I will go and try Daniel, and see whether he is able to stand in one temptation as Abraham his father, who is like to a palm tree branch, stood in (m) ten temptations; yea, I will also try Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, whether they are able to stand in their temptations; for the sake of whose righteousness I will redeem the people of the house of Israel, who are like to clusters of grapes; and the fame of Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, shall be heard in all the earth; and their smell shall be excellent, like the smell of the apples of the garden of Eden.

Verse 9. And the roof of thy mouth is like the best wine, &c.] Daniel and his companions said, We will surely take upon us the decree of the word of the Lord, as Abraham our father, who may be compared to old wine, took it upon him; and we will walk in the way which is right before him, even as Elijah and Elisha the prophets walked, through whose righteousness the dead, which are like to a man asleep, were raised; and as Ezekiel, the son of Buzi, by the prophecy of whose mouth those who were asleep were awaked, even the dead which were in the valley of (n) Dura.

Verse 10. I am my beloved's, &c.] Jerusalem (o) said, All the time that I was walking in the way of the Lord of the world, he caused his shechinah to dwell with me, and his desire was towards me: but when I turned aside out of his paths, he removed his shechinah from me, and carried me away among the nations; and they ruled over me as a man rules over his wife.

(m) The same is said in Targum Jerus. in Gen. xxii. 1. Bereshith Rabba, Parash. 56. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 15. Pirke Aboth, c. 5, s. 3, and Jarchi, ibid.; where he, out of Pirke Eliezer, has given us an account of them in this following order, viz., 1st. Nimrod sought to kill him, and he was hid in a field thirteen years. 2. He cast him into Ur of the Chaldees, or into a furnace of fire. 3. He banished him from the land of his nativity. 4. The Lord brought a famine in his days. 5. Sarah was taken into the house of Pharaoh. 6. The kings came and carried Lot his brother's son away captive. 7. It was shown him between the pieces, that four kingdoms should rule over his children. 8. He was commanded to circumcise himself and his children. 9. To put away Ishmael and his mother. And 10. To slay his son Isaac.

(n) In this valley Nebuchadnezzar set up his golden image, Dan. iii. 1. And here the Jews say the children of Ephraim were slain, who went out of Egypt before the time; as also the Israelites, whom the Chaldeans slew when they carried them captive; and that this is the valley Ezekiel was brought into by the Spirit of the Lord, Ezek. xxxvii. 1; and these the dry bones he prophesied over, which lived and stood upon their feet an exceeding great army, Targum Jon. in Exod. xiii. 17. R. Saadiah Gaon in Dan. iii. 1. Jarchi in Ezek. xxxvii. 1.

(o) That is, the inhabitants of Jerusalem, or the Shulamite the Church, as in chap. vi. 13. The Church is frequently

Verse 11. Come, my beloved, let us go forth into the field, &c.] When the people of the house of Israel sinned, the Lord carried them into captivity, into the land of Seir, the fields of Edom. The congregation of Israel said, I beseech thee, O Lord of the whole world, receive my prayer, which I have prayed before thee, in the cities of the captivity and in the provinces of the people.

Verse 12. Let us get up early to the vineyards, &c.] The children of Israel said one to another, Let us get up early in the morning, and let us go to the synagogue and to the school, and let us search in the book of the law, and see whether (p) the time of the redemption of the people of the house of Israel, who are like to a vine, is come, that they may be redeemed out of their captivity; and let us inquire of the wise men, whether the righteousness of the righteous, who are full of the commandments as pomegranates, is made manifest before the Lord; whether the time is come to go up to Jerusalem, there to give praise to the God of heaven, and to offer up the burnt-offerings, and the holy drink-offerings.

Verse 13. The mandrakes give a smell, &c.] And when it is the pleasure of the Lord to redeem his people out of captivity, it shall be said to the King Messiah, Now is the end of the captivity completed, and the righteousness of the righteous is become sweet as the smell of balsam, and the wise men fix their habitations by the gates of the school; they study in the (q) words of the scribes, and in the words of the law. Arise now, take the kingdom which I have reserved for thee.

called so in the Old Testament, and likewise in the New; see Gal. iv. 26; Heb. xii. 22; Rev. xxi. 2, 10.

(p) The Jews vainly expect the time of redemption by the Messiah to be future, when it is past many hundred years ago, as they might easily learn from the book of the law and the prophets; particularly from Jacob's prophecy in Gen. xlix. 10, from Haggai's in chap. ii. 6, 7, 8, and from Daniel's weeks in chap. ix. 24, 25, 26. See this fully proved in a book called "The prophecies of the Old Testament respecting the Messiah considered," &c. Chap. iii.

(q) The words of the scribes are mentioned before the words of the law, and are, indeed, by the Jews, preferred unto them. They say the words of the beloved, i. e., the wise men, are better than the wine of the law; so they paraphrase the words in Cant. i. 2: they assert that the law cannot be understood without the words of the scribes; that the oral law is the foundation of the written law, and not the written law the foundation of the oral law; and that he that transgresses the words of the wise men as much deserves death, as though he had been guilty of idolatry, murder, or adultery, or profaned the Sabbath; nay, that if these say their right hand is their left, and their left hand is their right, they are obliged to hearken to them, Shirhashirim Rabba, in c. 1, 2. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 14. Matthe Dan. Dialog. 3, fol. 31, 3. Jarchi in Deut. xvii. 11. Vide Buxtorf, Recensio Operis Talmud. pp. 222, 223, &c.

CHAPTER VIII.

Verse 1. O that thou wert as my brother, &c.] And when the King Messiah (a) shall be revealed unto the congregation of Israel, the children of Israel shall say

(a) The Jews very seldom speak of the birth or nativity of the Messiah as future, but only of a revelation or discovery of him to them, which they expect; for they are under self unto him, Be thou with us for a brother, and let us go up to Jerusalem, and let us suck with thee the senses of the law, as a sucking child sucketh the breasts of convictions that he was born long since. Some of them say he was born on the day the house of the sanctuary was destroyed, but is hid because of their sins and transgressions; its mother; for all the time that I was wandering without my own land, whenever I remembered the name of the great God, and laid down my life for the sake of his Deity, even the nations of the earth did not despise me.

Verse 2. I would lead thee, and bring thee, &c.] I will lead thee, O King Messiah, and bring thee to the house of my sanctuary; and thou shalt teach me to fear the Lord, and to walk in his paths; and there will we keep (b) the feast of leviathan, and drink old wine, which has been reserved in its grapes ever since the day the world was created, and of the pomegranates, the fruits which are prepared for the righteous in the garden of Eden.

Verse 3. His left hand should be under my head, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, I am chosen above all people, because I have bound the tephillin (c) upon my left hand, and upon my head, and have fixed the mezuzah (d) on the right side of my door, in and that either in the sea, or the walks of the garden of Eden; and some say that he sits among the lepers at the gates of Rome, from whence they expect he will come unto them, R. Aben Ezra, in Cant. vii. 5. Targum in Mic. iv. 8. Talmud Sanhedrin, fol. 98, col. 2. Targum Jerus. in Exod. xii. 42.

(b) The Jews expect a very sumptuous feast to be made for the righteous in the days of the Messiah, which will consist of all sorts of flesh, fish, and fowl, of plenty of generous wine, and of a variety of the most delicious fruit; some particulars of which they have thought fit to give, and are as follow: 1. They say an exceeding large ox shall be served up, which they take to be the behemoth in Job xl., of which they say many things monstrous and incredible; as that it lies upon a thousand hills, and feeds upon them all, and drinks up all the waters which are gathered together in a year's time, in the river Jordan, at one draught, Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 22. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 21. Targum in Psa. l. 10. Jarchi in ibid., and in Job xl. 20. 2. The next dish is the leviathan and his mate, which they say are "the great whales" mentioned in Gen. i. 21. The male, they say, God castrated, and the female he slew, and salted it against this feast, Talmud Baba Bathra, fol. 74. Targum Jon., Jarchi, and Baal Hatturim in Gen. i. 21. Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 13. Targum Seet. in Esth. iii. 7. Aben Ezra in Dan. xii. 2. 3. They speak of an exceeding large fowl, which they call Ziz, that shall be one part of this entertainment, of which they say many things incredible; as particularly, that when its feet are upon the earth its head reaches the heavens; and when it stretches out its wings, they cover the body of the sun, Baba Bathra, fol. 73, col. 2. Targum and Kinchi in Psa. l. 10. Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 22. 4. After all this shall be served up a variety of the most pleasant and delightful fruits, which are in the garden of Eden, which the Targumist here speaks of. And lastly, the wine which will then be used will be generous old wine, which, as it is said here and elsewhere, was kept in the grape from the creation of the world, Zohar in Gen. fol. 81, 4. Targum Jon. in Gen. xxvii. 25, and Targum in Eccles. ix. 7. Something of this gross notion seems to have obtained among the Jews in the times of Christ; see Luke xiv. 15. Vide Buxtorf Synagog. Jud. c. 50.

(c) These were four sections of the law, written on parchments, folded up in the skin of a clean beast, and tied to the head and band. The four sections were these following, viz.: The first was Exod. xiii. 2-11. The second was Exod. xiii. 11-17. The third was Deut. vi. 4-10. The fourth was Deut. xi. 13-22. Those that were for the head were written and rolled up separately, and put in four distinct places in one skin, which was fastened with strings to the crown of the head towards the face, about the place where the hair ends, and where an infant's brain is tender: and they take care to place them in the middle, that so they may be between the eyes. These that were for the hand were written in four columns, on one parchment, which, being rolled up, was fastened to the inside of the left arm, where it is fleshy, between the shoulder and the elbow, that so it might be over against the heart. These they call tephillin, from the root פָּלַל phal-lal, "to pray," because they use them in the time of prayer, and look upon them as useful to put them in mind of that duty; in Matt. xxiii. 5, they are called φύλακται, phylacteries, because they think they keep men in the fear of God, are preservatives from sin, nay, from evil spirits, and against diseases of the body; they imagine there is a great deal of holiness in them, and value themselves much upon the use of them, Targum Jon. Jarchi and Baal Hatturim in Exod. xiii. 9, 10, and Deut. vi. 8. Maimon. Hilch. Tephilin, c. 1, s. 1; c. 2, s. 1; c. 3, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6; and c. 4, 1, 2, 25. Matthe Dan. Dialog. 2, fol. 9, 4, and 10, 1. Vide Buxtorf Synagog. Jud. c. 9, and Leo Modena's History of the Rites, &c., of the Present Jews, par. 1, c. 11.

(d) These were two passages in the law, the one was Deut. vi. 4-10, the other was Deut. xi. 13-22, which were written on a piece of parchment in one column, which, being rolled up and put into a pipe of reed or wood, was fastened to the right side of the door-post: this they imagine was useful to put them in mind of the Divine Being, to preserve them from sin, and from evil spirits, Targum Jon. in Deut. vi. 9. Maimon. Hilch. Tephilin. c. 5, s. 1, 6, and 6, 13. Vide Buxtorf Synagog. Jud. c. 31.

(e) Magog was one of the sons of Japhet, Gen. x. 2, from whom very probably the people called by those two names sprung, who seem to be the Scythians or Tartars; for Josephus, Antiq. Jud. l. 1, c. 7, calls the Scythians Magogæ; and Hierapolis in Coeslyria, Pliny (Nat. Hist. l. 5, c. 23) says, was called by the Syrians Magog: and Marcus Paulus Venetus, l. 1, c. 64, says that "the countries of Gog and Magog are in Tartary, which they call Jug (perhaps rather Gog) and Mungug." Vide Schindler, Lex. Pent. fol. 288. Mention is made of these in Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix., Rev. xx. 8, 9; with which last text may be compared what the Targumist here says. The Jewish rabbins, in their writings, very frequently speak of the war of Gog and Magog, which they expect in the days of the Messiah. See Mr. Mede's works, book 1, disc. 48, p. 374, and book 3, pp. 713, 751.

(f) See Zech. xiv. 4.

(g) The Jews are of opinion, that those of their nation who die and are buried in other lands, at the resurrection of the dead shall not rise where they died and were buried; but shall be rolled through the caverns of the earth, into the land of Canaan, and there rise. This they call גִּלְגּוּל הַמֵּתִים gilgul hammethim, "the rolling of the dead," or גִּלְגּוּל הַמַּחְיֵה gilgul hammachiloth, "the rolling through the caverns," which they represent as very painful and afflicting; and say that this was the reason that Jacob desired he might not be buried in Egypt, and is now one reason why the Jews are so desirous of returning to their own land: nay, at this time the more wealthy and religious among them go thither on this very account, especially when advanced in years, that they may die, verns, and come out from under the Mount of Olives : but the wicked which die and are buried in the land of Israel shall be cast away, (h) as a man casts a stone with a sling ; then all the inhabitants of the earth shall say, What is the righteousness of this people, which ascend out of the earth, even ten thousand times ten thousand, as in the day they came up out of the wilderness to the land of Israel, and are deliciously fed by the mercies of the Lord, as in the day when they were hid (i) under Mount Sinai to receive the law ; and in that very hour Zion, which is the (k) mother of Israel, shall bring forth her sons, and Jerusalem receive the children of the captivity.

Verse 6. Set me as a seal upon thine heart, &c. The children of Israel said in that day unto their Lord, We pray thee, set us as the signature of a ring upon thine heart, as the signature of a ring upon thine arm, that we may not be carried captive any more ; for strong as death is the love of thy Deity, and mighty as hell is the envy which the people bear unto us ; and the hatred which they have reserved for us is like to the coals of the fire of hell, (l) which the Lord created on the second (m) day of the creation of the world, to (n) burn therein those who commit idolatry.

Verse 7. Many waters cannot quench love, &c.

and be buried there, and so escape this painful rolling under the earth, Bereshith Rabba, Parash. 96. Midrash Hannealam in Zohar in Gen. fol. 68, 4. Jarchi in Gen. xlvii. 29. Kimchi in Ezek. xxxvii. 12. Vide Buxtorf Synagog. Jud. c. 3, and Lex. Talmud, fol. 439.

(h) Though the resurrection of the dead is one of the thirteen articles of the Jewish creed, yet many of them are of opinion that it is peculiar to the righteous, and that the wicked shall have no share therein ; but that their bodies perish with their souls at death, and shall never rise more, R. David Kimchi, in Psa. i. 5, and in Isa. xxvi. 19. R. Saadiah Gaon, in Dan. xii. 2. Vide Pocock. Not. Misc. c. 6, p. 180, &c.

(i) The Targumist here refers to a fabulous notion of the Jews, that when the people of Israel came to Mount Sinai to receive the law, the Lord plucked up the mountain, and removed it into the air, and set the people under it, where he gave the law unto them ; this they collect from Exod. xix. 17, and Deut. iv. 11. And this, they say, is the apple tree under which the Church is here said to be raised up, Targum Jon. Jarchi and Baal Hatturim in Exod. xix. 17. Jarchi and Shirhashirim Rabba in loc.

(k) So Jerusalem is said to be "the mother of us all," in Gal. iv. 26.

(l) גהנום gehinnom, "the valley of Hinnom," where the idolaters caused their children to pass through the fire to Molech, and burned them, 2 Chron. xxviii. 3, and xxxiii. 6 ; Jer. vii. 31, and xxxii. 35. R. David Kimchi, in Psa. xxvii. 13, says that Gehinnom was a very contemptible place near Jerusalem, where all manner of filthiness and dead carcases were cast ; and that a continual fire was kept there to burn them : hence the word is used very frequently by the Jewish rabbins, to signify the place where the wicked are punished after death ; and so the word yeewva is used in the New Testament ; see Matt. v. 22, and x. 28, and elsewhere.

(m) The same is asserted in Talmud Pesach. fol. 54, 1. Bereshith Rabba, Parash. 4, and 11 and 21. Shemoth Rabba, Parash. 15. Zohar in Deut. fol. 120, 1. Jarchi in Isa. xxx. 33 ; and yet at other times they reckon hell among the seven things which were created before the world was, Talmud Pesach, fol. 54, 1, and Nedarim. fol. 39, 2. Zohar in Lev. fol. 14, 4. Targum Jon. in Gen. iii. 24. See Matt. xxv. 41.

(n) The punishment of the wicked in hell is very frequently expressed by Jewish writers, by their burning in fire and brimstone, Bereshith Rabba, Parash. 6 and 51. Zohar in

The Lord of the world said unto his people, the house of Israel, If all people, (o) which are like to the waters of the sea, which are many, were gathered together, they could not extinguish my love unto thee ; and if all the kings of the earth, which are like to the waters of a river that runs fiercely, they could not remove thee out of the world : but if a man will give all the substance of his house to obtain wisdom in the captivity, I will return unto him (p) double in the world to come ; and all the spoils (q) which they shall take from the armies of Gog shall be his.

Verse 8. We have a little sister, &c. At that time the angels of heaven shall say to one another, We have one nation in the earth, and her righteousness is very little, and the kings and governors do not bring her forth to make war with the armies of Gog. What shall we do for our sister, in the day when the nations shall speak of going up against her to war ?

Verse 9. If she be a wall, &c. Michael (r) the prince of Israel shall say, If she is fixed as a wall among the people, and gives silver to procure the (s) unity of the name of the Lord of the world, I and you, together with their scribes, will surround her as borders of silver, that the people may have no power to rule over her, even as a worm hath no power to rule over silver ; and though she (t) is poor in the

Gen. fol. 71, 3. Raya Mehimna, ibid. in Lev. fol. 7, 2 Targum Jon. and Jerus. in Gen. iii. 24. Targum Jerus. in Gen. xv. 12. Targum in Eccles. viii. 10, and x. 11. Targum in Isa. xxxiii. 14. R. David Kimchi in Isa. xxx. 33. Thus idolaters, with others, are said to "have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone," Rev. xxi. 8.

(o) So the words are explained in Shemoth Rabba, Parash. 49. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 2. Zohar in Num. fol. 105, 3. Raya Mehimna, ibid. in Gen. fol. 51, 3. Shirhashirim Rabba, Jarchi and Aben Ezra in loc.

(p) See Mark x. 30 ; Luke xviii. 30.

(q) See Ezek. xxxix. 9, 10.

(r) See Dan. x. 13, 21, and xii. 1. The Jews suppose that every nation or kingdom has an angel set over it, to be its president, protector, and defender ; and that Michael was he that presided over Israel.

(s) That is, the knowledge of the unity of God. The doctrine of the unity of the Divine Being is the second article of the Jewish creed, where they say that "God is one, and that there is no unity in any respect like his ;" this they very much magnify and extol. Hence they often have those words in their mouths, "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord," Deut. vi. 4 ; which, they think, is entirely inconsistent with a trinity of persons. Hence, says Maimonides, (Hilch. Yesod Hattorah, c. 1, s. 4,) "This God is one, not two, or more than two ; but one. For there is no unity like his in any of the individuals which are found in the world ; neither is he one in species, which comprehends more individuals ; nor one in body, which is divided into parts and extremes ; but he is so one, that there is no other unity like it in the world." All which is not so much opposed to the polytheism of the heathens, as to the plurality of persons in the trinity, and the incarnation of Christ. But though modern Jews have exploded the doctrine of the trinity, as inconsistent with that of the unity of the Divine Being, yet their more ancient writers do very manifestly speak of it as the great mystery of faith, Zohar edit. Sultzbac. in Gen. fol. 1, col. 3 ; in Exod. fol. 18, 3, 4, fol. 58, 1, and fol. 66, 2, 3 ; in Lev. fol. 27, 2, and in Num. fol. 67, 3. Jetzira. edit. Rittangel. fol. 1, 4, 6, 38, 64. Vide Josep. de Voisin. Disp. Theolog. de S. Trinitate, Allix's judgment of the Jewish Church, against the Unitarians, c. 9, 10, 11.

(t) In Raya Mehimna in Zohar in Exod. fol. 33, 3, it is said that "no man is poor but he that is so in the law and in the commandments ;" and that "the riches of a man lie in commandments, we will seek mercies for her from the Lord; and the righteousness of the law shall be remembered to her, in which infants study, being written upon (u) the table of the heart, and is placed over against the nations as a cedar.

Verse 10. I am a wall, &c.] The congregation of Israel answered and said, I am strong in the words of the law as a wall, and my sons are mighty as a tower; and at that time the congregation of Israel found mercy in the eyes of her Lord, and all the inhabitants of the earth asked of her welfare.

Verse 11. Solomon had a vineyard at Baal-hamon, &c.] One nation came up in the lot of the Lord of the world, (v) with whom is peace, which is like to a vineyard; (w) he placed it in Jerusalem, and delivered it into the hands of the kings of the house of David, who kept it as a vinedresser keeps his vineyard; after that Solomon king of Israel died, it was left in the hands of his son Rehoboam; Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, came and divided the kingdom with him, and took out of his hands ten tribes, according to the word of Ahijah of Shiloh, who was a great man.

Verse 12. My vineyard, which is mine, &c.] When Solomon, the king of Israel, heard the prophecy of Ahijah of Shiloh, he sought to (x) kill him; but Ahijah fled from Solomon, and went into Egypt. And at that time King Solomon was informed by prophecy that he should rule over the ten tribes all his days: but after his death Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, should rule over them; and the two tribes, Judah and Benjamin, Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, should reign over.

Verse 13. Thou that dwellest in the gardens, &c.] Solomon said at the end of his prophecy, The Lord of the world shall say to the congregation of Israel in the end of days, O thou congregation of Israel, which art like to a garden highly esteemed of among the nations, and sits in the school with the companions of the sanhedrin, and the rest of the people which hearken to the voice of the chief of the school, and learn from his mouth his words, cause me to hear the law, the voice of thy words, when thou sittest to justify and condemn, and I will consent to whatever thou dost.

Verse 14. Make haste, my beloved, &c.] In that very hour the elders of the congregation of Israel shall say, Flee, O my beloved, the Lord of the world, from this defiled earth, and cause thy shechinah to dwell in the highest heavens, and in the time of straits, when we pray before thee, be thou like a roe, which, when it sleeps, (y) has one eye shut and the other eye open; or as a young hart, which, when it flees, looks behind it; so do thou look upon us, and consider our sorrow and our affliction, from the highest heavens, until the time comes that thou wilt take pleasure in us, and redeem us, and bring us to the mountain of Jerusalem, where the priests shall offer up before thee the sweet incense.

them;" and in Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 34, where those words in Prov. xxii. 2, "The rich and poor meet together," are mentioned, it is said, "The rich is he that is rich in the law, and the poor is he that is poor in the law;" see also Zohar in Num. fol. 91, 3; with all which compare 1 Tim. vi. 18.

(u) See note on chap. iv. 9.

(v) In Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. it is explained in the same way; R. Aben Ezra, by Solomon in the next verse, understands the King Messiah; though it is interpreted of Solomon, king of Israel, by the Targum and Jarchi in loc., by Maimon. Yesod Hattorah, c. 6, s. 12, and in Zohar in Exod. fol. 91, 3.

(w) So it is explained of the people of Israel, under the government of Solomon in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi and Aben Ezra in loc.

(x) This is a very great mistake of the Targumist; for it was Jeroboam, and not Ahijah, who fled into Egypt, whom Solomon sought to kill; see 1 Kings xi. 40.

(y) The same is mentioned in Shirhashirim Rabba in loc.

OR THE SONGS OF JAYADEVA.

A mystical poem, supposed to have a near resemblance to the BOOK OF CANTICLES, many passages of which it illustrates.

PART I.

THE firmament is obscured by clouds, the woodlands are black with Tamala (1) trees.

That youth who roves in the forest must be fearful in the gloom of night.

Go, my daughter ; bring the wanderer home to my rustic mansion.

Such was the command of NANDA, (2) the fortunate herdsman ; and hence arose the loves of RADHA (3) and MADHAVA, (4) who sported on the bank of Yamuna, (5) or hastened eagerly to the secret bower.

If thy soul be delighted with the remembrance of HERI, (6) or sensible to the raptures of love, listen to the voice of JAYADEVA, whose notes are both sweet and brilliant.

O thou who reclinest on the bosom of CAMALA, (7) whose cars flame with gems, and whose locks are embellished with sylvan flowers ;

Thou from whom the day-star derived his effulgence, who showedst the venom-breathing CALIYA, (8) who beamedst like a sun on the tribe of YADU, (9) that flourished like a lotos ;

Thou, who sittest on the plumage of GARURA, (10) who, by subduing demons, gavest exquisite joy to the assembly of immortals ;

Thou, for whom the daughter of JANACA (11) was decked in gay apparel, by whom DUSHANA (12) was overthrown ;

Thou, whose eye sparkles like the water-lily, who calledst three worlds into existence ;

Thou, by whom the rocks of Mandar (13) were easily supported ; who sippest nectar from the radiant lips of PEDMA, (14) as the fluttering Chacora (15) drinks the moonbeams ;

Be victorious, O HERI, lord of conquest !

RADHA sought him long in vain, and her thoughts were confounded by the fever of desire.

She was roving in the vernal season, among the twining Vasantis, (16) covered with soft blossoms, when a damsel thus addressed her with youthful hilarity :

“The gale that has wanted round the beautiful clove plant breathes from the hill of MAYLAYA ; (17)

The circling arbours resound with the notes of the Cocila, (18) and the murmurs of honey-making swarms ;

Now the hearts of damsels, whose lovers are travelling at a distance, are pierced with anguish ;

While the blossoms of Bacul (19) are conspicuous among the flowrets covered with bees.

The Tamala, with leaves dark and fragrant, claims a tribute from the musk, which it vanquishes ;

And the clustering flowers of the Cinsuca (20) resembling the nails of Cama, (21) with which he rends the hearts of the young.

The full-blown Cesara (22) gleams like the sceptre of the world's monarch, love ;

And the pointed thyrsus of the Cetaci (23) resembles the darts by which lovers are wounded.

See the bunches of Patali (24) flowers filled with bees, like the quiver of Smara (25) full of shafts ;

While the tender blossom of the Caruna (26) smiles to see the whole world laying shame aside.

The far-scented Madhavi (27) beautifies the trees, round which it twines ;

And the fresh Malica (28) seduces with rich perfume even the hearts of hermits ;

While the Amra (29) tree with blooming tresses is embraced by the gay creeper Atimucta, (30)

And the blue streams of Yamuna wind round the groves of Vrindavan. (31)

In this charming season, which gives pain to separated lovers,

Young HERI sports and dances with a company of damsels.

A breeze, like the breath of love, from the fragrant flowers of the Cetaci, kindles every heart.

Whilst it perfumes the woods with the prolific dust, which it shakes from the Malica (32) with half opened buds ;

THE GITAGOVINDA.

And the Cocila bursts into song, when he sees the blossoms glistening on the lovely Rasala." (33)
The jealous RADHA gave no answer ;
And, soon after, her officious friend, perceiving the foe of MURA (34) in the forest, eager for the rapturous embraces of the herdsman's daughters, with whom he was dancing,
Thus again addressed his forgotten mistress :
" With a garland of wild flowers, descending even to the yellow mantle that girds his azure limbs, Distinguished by smiling cheeks, and by ear-rings that sparkle as he plays, HERI exults in the assemblage of amorous damsels.
One of them presses him with her swelling breast, while she warbles with exquisite melody.
Another, affected by a glance from his eye, stands meditating on the lotos of his face.
A third, on pretence of whispering a secret in his ear, approaches his temples, and kisses them with ardour
One seizes his mantle, and draws him towards her, pointing to the bower on the banks of Yamuna, where elegant Vanjulas (35) interweave their branches.
He applauds another who dances in the sportive circle, whilst her bracelets ring, as she beats time with her palms.
Now he caresses one, and kisses another, smiling on a third with complacency ;
And now he chases her, whose beauty has most allured him.
Thus the wanton HERI frolics, in the season of sweets, among the maids of Vraja, (36)
Who rush to his embraces, as if he were pleasure itself assuming a human form ;
And one of them, under a pretext of hymning his divine perfections, whispers in his ear,
'Thy lips, my beloved, are nectar.'

---

PART II.

RADHA remains in the forest : but, resenting the promiscuous passion of HERI, and his neglect of her beauty, which he once thought superior,
She retires to a bower of twining plants, the summit of which resounds with the humming of swarms engaged in their sweet labours ;
And there, fallen languid on the ground, she thus addresses her female companion :
" Though he take recreation in my absence, and smile on all around him, Yet my soul remembers him, whose beguiling reed modulates an air sweetened by the nectar of his quivering lip,
While his ear sparkles with gems, and his eye darts amorous glances ;
Him, whose looks are decked with the plumes of peacocks resplendent with many-coloured moons ;
And whose mantle gleams like a dark blue cloud illumined with rainbows ;
Him, whose graceful smile gives new lustre to his lips, brilliant and soft as a dewy leaf, sweet and ruddy as the blossom of Bandhujiva, (37)
While they tremble with eagerness to kiss the daughters of the herdsmen ;
Him, who disperses the gloom with beams from the jewels which decorate his bosom, his wrists, and his ankles ;
On whose forehead shines a circlet of sandal wood, which makes even the moon contemptible, when it moves through irradiated clouds ;
Him, whose ear-rings are formed of entire gems in the shape of the fish Macara (38) on the banners of love.
Even the yellow-robed god, whose attendants are the chiefs of deities, of holy men, and of demons ;
Him who reclines under a gay Cadumba (39) tree, who formerly delighted me while he gracefully waved in the dance,
And all his soul sparkled in his eye.
My weak mind thus enumerates his qualities ; and, though offended, strives to banish offence.
What else can do it ! It cannot part with its affection for CRISHNA, whose love is excited by other damsels, and who sports in the absence of RADHA.
Bring, O my sweet friend, that vanquisher of the demon Cesi (40) to sport with me, who am repairing to a secret bower,
Who look timidly on all sides, who meditate with amorous fancy on his divine transfiguration.
Bring him, whose discourse was once composed of the gentlest words, to converse with me, who am bashful on his first approach,
And express my thoughts with a smile sweet as honey.
Bring him, who formerly slept on my bosom, to recline with me on a green bed of leaves just gathered, while his lips shed dew, and my arms enfold him.
Bring him, who has attained the perfection of skill in love's art, whose hand used to press these firm and delicate spheres, to play with me,
Whose voice rivals that of the Cocila, and whose tresses are bound with waving blossoms.
Bring him, who formerly drew me by the locks to his embrace, to repose with me whose feet tinkle, as they move, with rings of gold and of gems,

THE GITAGOVINDA.

Whose loosened zone sounds, as it falls ; and whose limbs are slender and flexible as the creeping plant.
That god, whose cheeks are beautified by the nectar of his smiles, Whose pipe drops in his ecstacy from his hand, I saw in the grove encircled by the damsels of Vraja, who gazed on him askance from the corners of their eyes.
I saw him in the grove with happier damsels, yet the sight of him delighted me.
Soft is the gale which breathes over yon clear pool, and expands the clustering blossoms of the voluble
Asoca ; (41)
Soft, yet grievous to me in the absence of the foe of Madhu.
Delightful are the flowers of Amra trees on the mountain top, while the murmuring bees pursue their voluptuous toil ;
Delightful, yet afflicting to me, O friend, in the absence of the youthful Cesava."

---

PART III.

Meantime, the destroyer of CANSA, (42) having brought to his remembrance the amiable RADHA, forsook the beautiful damsels of Vraja.
He sought her in all parts of the forest ; his whole wound from love's arrow bled again ;
He repented of his levity ; and, seated in a bower near the bank of Yamuna, the blue daughter of the sun,
Thus poured forth his lamentation :
"She is departed ; she saw me, no doubt, surrounded by the wanton shepherdesses ;
Yet, conscious of my fault, I durst not intercept her flight.
Who is me ! she feels a sense of injured honour, and is departed in wrath.
How will she conduct herself ! How will she express her pain in so long a separation ?
What is wealth to me ! What are numerous attendants ?
What are the pleasures of the world ! What joy can I receive from a heavenly abode !
I seem to behold her face with eyebrows contracting themselves through a just resentment ;
It resembles a fresh lotos, over which two black bees are fluttering.
I seem, so present is she to my imagination, even now to caress her with eagerness.
Why then do I seek her in this forest ? why do I lament her without cause ?
O slender damsel, I know that anger has torn thy soft bosom ;
But whither thou art retired, that I know not.
How can I invite thee to return ?
Thou art seen by me, indeed, in a vision ; thou seemest to move before me.
Ah ! why dost thou not rush, as before, to my embrace ?
Do but forgive me : never again will I commit a similar offence.
Grant me but a sight of thee, O lovely Radhica ; for my passion torments me.
I am not the terrible Mahesa : (43) a garland of water-lilies with subtle filaments decks my shoulders ; not serpents, with twisted folds.
The blue petals of the lotos glitter on my neck ; not the azure gleam of poison.
Powdered sandal-wood is sprinkled on my limbs ; not pale ashes.
O god of love, mistake me not for Mahadeva. (44)
Wound me not again ; approach me not in anger ;
I love already but too passionately ; yet I have lost my beloved.
Hold not in thy hand that shaft barbed with an Amra flower.
Brace not thy bow, O conqueror of the world. Is it valour to slay one who faints !
My heart is already pierced by arrows from Radha's eyes, black and keen as those of an antelope ;
Yet my eyes are not gratified with her presence.
Her eyes are full of shafts ; her eyebrows are bows ; and the tips of her ears are silken strings.
Thus armed by Ananga, (45) the god of desire, she marches, herself a goddess, to ensure his triumph over the vanquished universe.
I meditate on her delightful embrace, on the ravishing glances darted from her eye,
On the fragrant lotos of her mouth, on her nectar-dropping speech,
On her lips, ruddy as the berries of the Bimba (46) plant ;
Yet even my fixed meditation on such an assemblage of charms increases instead of alleviating the misery of separation."

---

PART IV.

The damsel, commissioned by RADHA, found the disconsolate god under an arbour of spreading Vaniras by the side of Yamuna ; where, presenting herself gracefully before him, she thus described the affliction of his beloved :

THE GITAGOVINDA

"She despises essence of sandal-wood, and even by moonlight sits brooding over her gloomy sorrow ; She declares the gale of Malaya to be venom ; and the sandal-trees, through which it has breathed, to have been the haunt of serpents.

Thus, O MADHAVA, is she afflicted in thy absence with the pain which love's dart has occasioned : her soul is fixed on thee.

Fresh arrows of desire are continually assailing her, and she forms a net of lotos leaves as armour for her heart, which thou alone shouldst fortify.

She makes her own bed of the arrows darted by the flowery-shafted god : but when she hoped for thy embrace, she had formed for thee a couch of soft blossoms.

Her face is like a water-lily, veiled in the dew of tears ; and her eyes appear like moons eclipsed, which let fall their gathered nectar through pain caused by the tooth of the furious dragon.

She draws thy image with musk in the character of the deity with five shafts, having subdued the Macar, or horned shark, and holding an arrow tipped with an Amra flower ; thus she draws thy picture, and worships it.

At the close of every sentence, O MADHAVA, she exclaims, At thy feet am I fallen, and in thy absence even the moon, though it be a vase full of nectar, inflames my limbs.

Then by the power of imagination she figures thee standing before her ; thee, who art not easily attained ; She sighs, she smiles, she mourns, she weeps, she moves from side to side, she laments and rejoices by turns. Her abode is a forest ; the circle of her female companions is a net ; Her sighs are flames of fire kindled in a thicket ; herself (alas ! through thy absence) is become a timid roe ; and love is the tiger who springs on her like YAMA, the genius of death.

So emaciated is her beautiful body, that even the light garland which waves over her bosom she thinks a load. Such, O bright-haired god, is RADHA when thou art absent.

If powder of sandal-wood finely levigated be moistened and applied to her bosom, she starts, and mistakes it for poison.

Her sighs form a breeze long extended, and burn her like the flame which reduced CANDARPA (47) to ashes She throws around her eyes, like blue water-lilies with broken stalks, dropping lucid streams. Even her bed of tender leaves appears in her sight like a kindled fire.

The palm of her hand supports her aching temple, motionless as the crescent rising at eve.

HERI, HERI, thus in silence she meditates on thy name, as if her wish were gratified, and she were dying through thy absence.

She rends her locks ; she pants ; she laments inarticulately ; She trembles ; she pines ; she muses ; she moves from place to place ; she closes her eyes ; She falls ; she rises again ; she faints : in such a fever of love she may live, O celestial physician, if thou administer the remedy ;

But shouldst thou be unkind, her malady will be desperate.

Thus, O divine healer, by the nectar of thy love must RADHA be restored to health ; and if thou refuse it, thy heart must be harder than the thunder-stone.

Long has her soul pined, and long has she been heated with sandal-wood, moonlight, and water-lilies, with which others are cooled ;

Yet she patiently and in secret meditates on thee, who alone canst relieve her.

Shouldst thou be inconstant, how can she, wasted as she is to a shadow, support life a single moment ?

How can she, who lately could not endure thy absence even an instant, forbear sighing now, when she looks with half-closed eyes on the Rasala with blooming branches, which remind her of the vernal season, when she first beheld thee with rapture ?"

"Here have I chosen my abode : go quickly to RADHA ; sooth her with my message, and conduct her hither."

So spoke the foe of MADHU (48) to the anxious damsel, who hastened back, and thus addressed her companion :

"Whilst a sweet breeze from the hills of Malaya comes wafting on his plumes the young god of desire, While many a flower points his extended petals to pierce the bosoms of separated lovers, The deity crowned with sylvan blossoms laments, O friend, in thy absence.

Even the dewy rays of the moon burn him ; and as the shaft of love is descending, he mourns inarticulately with increasing distraction.

When the bees murmur softly, he covers his ears ; Misery sits fixed in his heart, and every returning night adds anguish to anguish.

He quits his radiant palace for the wild forest, where he sinks on a bed of cold clay, and frequently mutters thy name.

In yon bower, to which the pilgrims of love are used to repair, he meditates on thy form, repeating in silence some enchanting word which once dropped from thy lips, and thirsting for the nectar which they alone can supply.

Delay not, O loveliest of women ; follow the lord of thy heart : behold, he seeks the appointed shade, bright with the ornaments of love, and confident of the promised bliss.

Having bound his locks with forest flowers, he hastens to yon arbour, where a soft gale breathes over the banks of Yamuna :

THE GITAGOVINDA.

There, again pronouncing thy name, he modulates his divine reed.

Oh! with what rapture doth he gaze on the golden dust, which the breeze shakes from expanded blossoms :
The breeze which has kissed thy cheek !

With a mind languid as a drooping wing, feeble as a trembling leaf, he doubtfully expects thy approach, and timidly looks on the path which thou must tread.

Leave behind thee, O friend, the ring which tinkles on the delicate ankle, when thou sportest in the dance ;
Hastily cast over thee thy azure mantle, and run to the gloomy bower.

The reward of thy speed, O thou who sparklest like lightning, will be to shine on the blue bosom of MURARI, (49)

Which resembles a vernal cloud, decked with a string of pearls like a flock of white water-birds fluttering in the air.

Disappoint not, O thou lotos-eyed, the vanquisher of MADHU ; accomplish his desire.

But go quickly : it is night ; and the night also will quickly depart.

Again and again he sighs ; he looks around ; he re-enters the arbour ; he can scarce articulate thy sweet name ;

He again smooths his flowery couch ; he looks wild ; he becomes frantic ; thy beloved will perish through desire.

The bright-beamed god sinks in the west, and thy pain of separation may also be removed ;

The blackness of the night is increased, and the passionate imagination of GOVINDA (50) has acquired additional gloom.

My address to thee has equalled in length and in sweetness the song of the Cocila ; delay will make thee miserable, O my beautiful friend.

Seize the moment of delight in the place of assignation with the son of DEVACI, (51) who descended from heaven to remove the burdens of the universe.

He is a blue gem on the forehead of the three worlds, and longs to sip honey like the bee from the fragrant lotos of thy cheek."

But the solicitous maid, perceiving that RADHA was unable, through debility, to move from her arbour of flowery creepers, returned to GOVINDA, who was himself disordered with love, and thus described her situation :

"She mourns, O sovereign of the world, in her verdant bower ;

She looks eagerly on all sides in hope of thy approach ; then, gaining strength from the delightful idea of the proposed meeting, she advances a few steps, and falls languid on the ground.

When she rises, she weaves bracelets of fresh leaves ; she dresses herself like her beloved, and looking at herself in sport, exclaims, 'Behold the vanquisher of MADHU !'

Then she repeats again and again the name of HIRI, and catching at a dark blue cloud, strives to embrace it, saying, 'It is my beloved who approaches.'

Thus, while thou art dilatory, she lies expecting thee : she mourns ; she weeps ; she puts on her gayest ornaments to receive her lord ;

She compresses her deep sighs within her bosom ; and then, meditating on thee, O cruel, she is drowned in a sea of rapturous imaginations.

If a leaf but quiver, she supposes thee arrived ; she spreads her couch ; she forms in her mind a hundred modes of delight ;

Yet, if thou go not to her bower, she must die this night through excessive anguish."

---

PART V.

By this time the moon spread a net of beams over the groves of Vrindavan,

And looked like a drop of liquid sandal on the face of the sky, which smiled like a beautiful damsel ;

While its orb with many spots betrayed, as it were, a consciousness of guilt, in having often attended amorous maids to the loss of their family honour.

The moon, with a black fawn couched on its disk, advanced in its nightly course.

But MADHAVA had not advanced to the bower of RADHA, who thus bewailed his delay with notes of varied lamentations :

"The appointed moment is come ; but HIRI, alas! comes not to the grove.

Must the season of my unblemished youth pass thus idly away !

Oh! what refuge can I seek, deluded as I am by the guile of my female adviser ?

The god with five arrows has wounded my heart ; and I am deserted by him, for whose sake I have sought at night the darkest recess of the forest.

Since my best beloved friends have deceived me, it is my wish to die ;

Since my senses are disordered, and my bosom is on fire—why stay I longer in this world !

The coolness of this vernal night gives me pain, instead of refreshment.

Some happier damsel enjoys my beloved ; whilst I, alas! am looking at the gems of my bracelets, which are blackened by the flames of my passion.

THE GITAGOVINDA.

My neck, more delicate than the tenderest blossom, is hurt by the garland that encircles it :
 Flowers are, indeed, the arrows of love, and he plays with them cruelly.
 I make this wood my dwelling : I regard not the roughness of the Vetas trees ;
 But the destroyer of MADHU holds me not in his remembrance !
 Why comes he not to the bower of the blooming Vanjulas, assigned for meeting ?
 Some ardent rival, no doubt, keeps him locked in her embrace.
 Or have his companions detained him with mirthful recreations ?
 Else why roams he not through the cool shades ?
 Perhaps, through weakness, the heart-sick lover is unable to advance even a step !"
 So saying, she raised her eyes ; and, seeing her damsel return silent and mournful, unaccompanied by MADHAVA, she was alarmed even to frenzy ;
 And, as if she actually beheld him in the arms of a rival, she thus described the vision which overpowered her intellect :

" Yes, in habiliments becoming the war of love, and with tresses waving like flowery banners,
 A damsel, more alluring than RADHA, enjoys the conqueror of MADHU.
 Her form is transfigured by the touch of her divine lover ; her garland quivers over her swelling bosom ;
 Her face like the moon is graced with clouds of dark hair, and trembles while she quaffs the nectareous dew of his lip ;
 Her bright ear-rings dance over her cheeks, which they irradiate ; and the small bells on her girdle tinkle as she moves.

Bashful at first, she smiles at length on her embracer, and expresses her joy with inarticulate murmurs ;
 While she floats on the waves of desire, and closes her eyes dazzled with the blaze of approaching CAMA :
 And now this heroine in love's warfare falls, exhausted and vanquished by the resistless MURARI.
 But alas ! in my bosom prevails the flame of jealousy, and yon moon, which dispels the sorrow of others, increases mine.

See again, where the foe of MURA sports in yon grove, on the bank of the Yamuna.
 See how he kisses the lip of my rival, and imprints on her forehead an ornament of pure musk, black as the young antelope on the lunar orb !
 Now, like the husband of RETI, (52) he fixes white blossoms on her dark locks, where they gleam like flashes of lightning among the curled clouds.

On her breasts, like two firmaments, he places a string of gems like a radiant constellation.
 He binds on her arms, graceful as the stalks of the water-lily, and adorned with hands glowing like the petals of its flower, a bracelet of sapphires, which resembles a cluster of bees.

Ah ! see how he ties round her waist a rich girdle illumined with golden bells, Which seem to laugh as they tinkle, at the inferior brightness of the leafy garlands, which lovers hang on their bowers to propitiate the god of desire.

He places her soft foot, as he reclines by her side, on his ardent bosom, and stains it with the ruddy hue of Yavaca.

Say, my friend, why pass I my nights in this tangled forest without joy, and without hope,
 While the faithless brother of HALADHERA clasps my rival in his arms ?
 Yet why, my companion, shouldst thou mourn, though my perfidious youth has disappointed me ?
 What offence is it of thine, if he sport with a crowd of damsels happier than I ?
 Mark, how my soul, attracted by his irresistible charms, bursts from its mortal frame, and rushes to mix with its beloved.

She, whom the god enjoys, crowned with sylvan flowers, Sits carelessly on a bed of leaves with him, whose wanton eyes resemble blue water-lilies agitated by the breeze.

She feels no flame from the gales of Malaya with him, whose words are sweeter than the water of life.
 She derides the shafts of soul-born CAMA with him, whose lips are like a red lotos in full bloom.
 She is cooled by the moon's dewy beams, while she reclines with him, whose hands and feet glow like vernal flowers.

No female companion deludes her, while she sports with him, whose vesture blazes like tried gold.
 She faints not through excess of passion, while she caresses that youth who surpasses in beauty the inhabitants of all worlds.

O gale, scented with sandal, who breathest love from the regions of the south, be propitious but for a moment :

When thou hast brought my beloved before my eyes, thou mayest freely waft away my soul.
 Love, with eyes like blue water-lilies, again assails me, and triumphs ;
 And, while the perfidy of my beloved rends my heart, my female friend is my foe ;
 The cool breeze scorches me like a flame, and the nectar-dropping moon is my poison.
 Bring disease and death, O gale of Malaya ! Seize my spirit, O god with five arrows !
 I ask not mercy from thee : no more will I dwell in the cottage of my father.
 Receive me in thy azure waves, O sister of YAMA, (53) that the ardour of my heart may be allayed."

THE GITAGOVINDA.

PART VI.

Pierced by the arrows of love, she passed the night in the agonies of despair, and at early dawn thus rebuked her lover, whom she saw lying prostrate before her, and imploring her forgiveness :

"Alas! alas! go, MADHAVA, depart, O CESAVA, (54) speak not the language of guile ;

Follow her, O lotus-eyed god, follow her, who dispels thy care.

Look at his eye half opened, red with continual waking through the pleasurable night, yet smiling still with affection for my rival!

Thy teeth, O cerulean youth, are azure as thy complexion, from the kisses which thou hast imprinted on the beautiful eyes of thy darling, graced with dark blue powder ;

And thy limbs, marked with punctures in love's warfare, exhibit a letter of conquest written on polished sapphires with liquid gold.

That broad bosom, stained by the bright lotos of her foot, displays a vesture of ruddy leaves over the tree of thy heart, which trembles within it.

The pressure of her lip on thine, wounds me to the soul.

Ah! how canst thou assert that we are one, since our sensations differ thus widely ?

Thy soul, O dark-limbed god, shows its blackness externally.

How couldst thou deceive a girl who relied on thee ; a girl who burned in the fever of love ?

Thou rovest in the woods, and females are thy prey :—what wonder !

Even thy childish heart was malignant ; and thou gavest death to the nurse, who would have given thee milk.

Since thy tenderness for me, of which these forests used to talk, has now vanished ;

And since thy breast, reddened by the feet of my rival, glows as if thy ardent passion for her were bursting from it,

The sight of thee, O deceiver, makes me (ah! must I say it!) blush at my own affection."

Having thus inveighed against her beloved, she sat overwhelmed in grief, and silently meditated on his charms ; when her damsel softly addressed her :

"He is gone: the light air has wafted him away. What pleasure, now my beloved, remains in thy mansion ?

Continue not, resentful woman, thy indignation against the beautiful MADHAVA.

Why shouldst thou render vain those round, smooth vases, ample and ripe as the sweet fruit of yon Tala tree !

How often and how recently have I said, Forsake not the blooming HERI !

Why sittest thou so mournful ! Why weepst thou with distraction, when the damsels are laughing around thee ?

Thou hast formed a couch of soft lotos leaves : let thy darling charm thy sight, while he reposes on it.

Afflict not thy soul with extreme anguish : but attend to my words, which conceal no guile.

Suffer CESAVA to approach ; let him speak with exquisite sweetness, and dissipate all thy sorrows.

If thou art harsh to him, who is amiable ; if thou art proudly silent, when he deprecates thy wrath with lowly prostrations ;

If thou showest aversion to him, who loves thee passionately ; if, when he bends before thee, thy face be turned contemptuously away ;

By the same rule of contrariety the dust of sandal-wood, which thou hast sprinkled, may become poison ;

The moon, with cool beams, a scorching sun ; the fresh dew, a consuming flame ; and the sports of love be changed into agony."

MADHAVA was not absent long ; he returned to his beloved ; whose cheeks were healed by the sultry gale of her sighs.

Her anger was diminished, not wholly abated ; but she secretly rejoiced at his return, while the shades of night also were approaching.

She looked abashed at her damsel, while he, with faltering accents, implored her forgiveness.

"Speak but one mild word, and the rays of thy sparkling teeth will dispel the gloom of my fears.

My trembling lips, like thirsty Chacorus, long to drink the moonbeams of thy cheek.

O my darling, who art naturally so tender-hearted, abandon thy causeless indignation.

At this moment the flame of desire consumes my heart. Oh! grant me a draught of honey from the lotos of thy mouth.

Or if thou beest inexorable, grant me death from the arrows of thy keen eyes.

Make thy arms my chains ; and punish me according to thy pleasure.

Thou art my life ; thou art my ornament ; thou art a pearl in the ocean of my mortal birth :

Oh! be favourable now, and my heart shall eternally be grateful.

Thine eyes, which nature formed like blue water-lilies, are become, through thy resentment, like petals of the crimson lotos.

Oh! tinge with their effulgence these my dark limbs, that they may glow like the shafts of love tipped with flowers.

Place on my head that foot like a fresh leaf : and shade me from the sun of my passion, whose beams I am unable to bear.

THE GITAGOVINDA.

Spread a string of gems on those two soft globes ; let the golden bells of thy zone tinkle, and proclaim the mild edict of love.
Say, O damsel, with delicate speech, shall I dye red with the juice of Alactaga those beautiful feet, which make the full blown land-lotos blush with shame ?
Abandon thy doubts of my heart, now indeed fluttering through fear of thy displeasure, but hereafter to be fixed wholly on thee ;
A heart, which has no room in it for another : none else can enter it, but love, the bodyless god.
Let him wing his arrows ; let him wound me mortally ; decline not, O cruel, the pleasure of seeing me expire
Thy face is bright as the moon, though its beams drop the venom of maddening desire ;
Let thy nectareous lip be the charmer, who alone has power to lull the serpent, or supply an antidote for his poison.
Thy silence afflicts me : Oh ! speak with the voice of music, and let thy sweet accents allay my ardour.
Abandon thy wrath : but abandon not a lover, who surpasses in beauty the sons of men, and who kneels before thee, O thou most beautiful among women.
Thy lips are a Bandhujiva flower ; the lustre of the Madhuca (55) beams on thy cheek ;
Thine eye outshines the blue lotos ; thy nose is a bud of the Tila ; (56) the Cunda (57) blossom yields to thy teeth ;
Thus the flowery-shafted god borrows from thee the points of his darts, and subdues the universe.
Surely thou descendest from heaven, O slender damsel, attended by a company of youthful goddesses ; and all their beauties are collected in thee."

PART VII.

He spake ; and seeing her appeased by his homage, flew to his bower, clad in a gay mantle.
The night now veiled all visible objects ; and the damsel thus exhorted Radha, while she decked her with beaming ornaments :
" Follow, gentle RADHICA, follow the son of MADHU ;
His disclosure was elegantly composed of sweet phrases ; he prostrated himself at thy feet, and he now hastens to his delightful couch by yon grove of branching Vanjalas.
Bind round thy ankle rings beaming with gems ; and advance with mincing steps, like the pearl-fed Marala.
Drink with ravished ears the soft accents of HERI ; and feast on love, while the warbling Cocilas obeys the mild ordinance of the flower-darting god.
Abandon delay : see the whole assembly of slender plants, pointing to the bower with fingers of young leaves, agitated by the gale, make signals for thy departure.
Ask those two round hillocks, which receive pure dew-drops from the garland playing on thy neck, and the buds whose tops start aloft with the thought of thy darling ;
Ask, and they will tell, that thy soul is intent on the warfare of love :
Advance, fervid warrior, advance with alacrity, while the sound of thy tinkling waist-bells shall represent martial music.
Lead with thee some favoured maid ; grasp her hand with thine, whose fingers are long and smooth as love's arrows.
March ; and with the noise of thy bracelets proclaim thy approach to the youth, who will own himself thy slave.
' She will come ; she will exult in beholding me ; she will pour accents of delight ;
She will enfold me with eager arms ; she will melt with affection.'
Such are his thoughts at this moment ; and, thus thinking, he looks through the long avenue ;
He trembles ; he rejoices ; he burns ; he moves from place to place ; he faints, when he sees thee not coming, and falls in his gloomy bower.
The night now dresses in habiliments fit for secrecy the many damsels, who hasten to their places of assignation ;
She sets off with blackness their beautiful eyes ; fixes dark Tamala leaves behind their ears ;
Decks their locks with the deep azure of water-lilies, and sprinkles musk on their panting bosoms.
The nocturnal sky, black as the touchstone, tries the gold of their affections,
And is marked with rich lines from the flashes of their beauty, in which they surpass the brightest Cashmirians."
RADHA, thus incited, tripped through the forest : but shame overpowered her, when, by the light of innumerable gems on the arms, the neck, and the feet of her beloved,
She saw him at the door of his flowery mansion ; then her damsel again addressed her with ardent exultation :
" Enter, sweet RADHA, the bower of HERI ; seek delight, O thou whose bosom laughs with the foretaste of happiness.
Enter, sweet RADHA, the bower graced with a bed of Asoca leaves ; seek delight, O thou whose garland leaps with joy on thy breast.

THE GITAGOVINDA.

Enter, sweet RADHA, the bower illumined with gay blossoms ; seek delight, O thou whose limbs far excel them in softness.

Enter, O RADHA, the bower made cool and fragrant by gales from the woods of Malaya ; seek delight, O thou whose amorous lays are softer than breezes.

Enter, O RADHA, the bower spread with leaves of twining creepers ; seek delight, O thou whose arms have been long inflexible.

Enter, O RADHA, the bower which resounds with the murmur of honey-making bees ; seek delight, O thou whose embrace yields more exquisite sweetness.

Enter, O RADHA, the bower attuned by the melodious band of Cocilas ; seek delight, O thou whose lips, which outshine the grains of the pomegranate, are embellished, when thou speakest, by the brightness of thy teeth.

Long has he borne thee in his mind ; and now, in an agony of desire, he pants to taste nectar from thy lip. Deign to restore thy slave, who will bend before the lotos of thy foot, and press it to his irradiated bosom. A slave, who acknowledges himself bought by thee for a single glance from thy eye, and a toss of thy disdainful eyebrow."

She ended ; and RADHA with timid joy, darting her eyes on GOVINDA, while she musically sounded the rings of her ankles, and the bells of her zone, entered the mystic bower of her only beloved.

There she beheld her MADHAVA, who delighted in her alone ;

Who so long had sighed for her embrace ; and whose countenance then gleamed with excessive rapture. His heart was agitated by her sight, as the waves of the deep are affected by the lunar orb.

His azure breast glittered with pearls of unblemished lustre, like the full bed of the cerulean Yamuna, interspersed with curls of white foam.

From his graceful waste flowed a pale yellow robe, which resembled the golden dust of the water-lily scattered over its blue petals.

His passion was inflamed by the glances of her eyes, which played like a pair of water-birds with blue plumage, that sport near a full-blown lotos on a pool in the season of dew.

Bright ear-rings, like two suns, displayed in full expansion the flowers of his cheeks and lips, which glistened with the liquid radiance of smiles.

His looks, interwoven with blossoms, were like a cloud variegated with moonbeams ;

And on his forehead shone a circle of odorous oil, extracted from the sandal of Malaya, like the moon just appearing on the dusky horizon ;

While his whole body seemed in a flame from the blaze of unnumbered gems.

Tears of transport gushed in a stream from the full eyes of RADHA, and their watery glances gleamed on her best beloved.

Even shame, which before had taken its abode in their dark pupils, was itself ashamed, and departed, when the fawn-eyed RADHA gazed on the brightened face of CRISHNA.

While she passed by the soft edge of his couch, and the bevy of his attendant nymphs, pretending to strike the gnats from their cheeks in order to conceal their smiles, warily retired from the bower.

PART VIII.

GOVINDA, seeing his beloved cheerful and serene, her lips sparkling with smiles, and her eyes speaking desire, thus eagerly addressed her ; while she carelessly reclined on the leafy bed strewn with soft blossoms.

Set the lotos of thy foot on this azure bosom ; and let this couch be victorious over all who rebel against love.

Give short rapture, sweet RADHA, to NARAYAN, (58) thy adorer.

I do thee homage ; I press with my blooming palms thy feet, weary with so long a walk.

O that I were the golden ring that plays round thy ankle !

Speak but one gentle word ; bid nectar drop from the bright moon of thy mouth.

Since the pain of absence is removed, let me thus remove the thin vest that enviously hides thy charms.

Blest should I be, if those raised globes were fixed on my bosom, and the ardour of my passion allayed.

Oh suffer me to quaff the liquid bliss of those lips ;

Restore with their water of life thy slave, who has long been lifeless, whom the fire of separation has consumed.

Long have these ears been afflicted in thy absence by the notes of the Cocila.

Relieve them with the sound of thy tinkling waist-bells, which yield music, almost equal to the music of thy voice.

Why are those eyes half closed ? Are they ashamed of seeing a youth to whom thy careless resentment gave anguish !

Oh, let affliction cease, and let ecstasy drown the remembrance of sorrow.

THE GITAGOVINDA.

PART IX.

In the morning she rose disarrayed, and her eyes betrayed a night without slumber ; when the yellow-robed god, who gazed on her with transport, thus meditated on her charms in his heavenly mind :
Though her locks be diffused at random ; though the lustre of her lips be faded ; though her garland and zone be fallen from their enchanting stations ;
And though she hide their places with her hands, looking towards me with bashful silence, yet even thus disarrayed, she fills me with ecstatic delight.
But RADHA, preparing to array herself, before the company of nymphs could see her confusion, spake thus with exultation to her obsequious lover :
Place, O son of YADU, with fingers cooler than sandal-wood, place a circlet of musk on this breast, which resembles a vase of consecrated water, crowned with fresh leaves, and fixed near a vernal bower, to propitiate the god of love.
Place, my darling, the glossy powder, which would make the blackest bee envious, on this eye, whose glances are keener than arrows darted by the husband of RETI.
Fix, O accomplished youth, the two gems, which form part of love's chain, in those ears, whence the antelopes of thine eyes may run downwards, and sport at pleasure.
Place now a fresh circle of musk, black as the lunar spots, on the moon of my forehead ; and mix gay flowers on my tresses with a peacock's feathers, in graceful order, that they may wave like the banners of CANA.
Now replace, O tender-hearted, the loose ornaments of my vesture ; and refix the golden bells of my girdle on their destined station, which resembles those hills where the god with five shafis, who destroyed SAMBARA, (59) keeps his elephant ready for battle.
While she spake the heart of YADAVA triumphed ; and obeying her sportful behests, he placed musky spots on her bosom and forehead, dyed her temples with radiant hues, embellished her eyes with additional blackness, decked her braided hair and her neck with fresh garlands, and tied on her wrists the loosened bracelets, on her ankles the beamy rings, and round her waist the zone of bells, that sounded with ravishing melody.
Whatever is delightful in the modes of music, whatever is divine in meditations on VISHNU, (60) whatever is exquisite in the sweet art of love, whatever is graceful in the fine strains of poetry, all that let the happy and wise learn from the songs of JAYADEVA, (61) whose soul is united with the foot of NARAYAN.
May that HARI be your support, who expanded himself into an infinity of bright forms, when, eager to gaze, with myriads of eyes, on the daughter of the ocean, he displayed his great character of the all-pervading deity, by the multiplied reflections of his divine person in the numberless gems on the many heads of the king of serpents, whom he chose for his couch ;
That HARI, who removing his lucid veil from the bosom of PEDMA, and fixing his eyes on the delicious buds that grew on it, diverted her attention by declaring that, when she had chosen him as her bridegroom near the sea of milk, the disappointed husband of PERVATI (62) drank in despair the venom, which dyed his neck azure !

I HAVE now placed before my readers this extraordinary poem, which I believe will be considered by every adequate judge to be equal, if not superior, to every thing of the kind that has been produced, either by the ancients or moderns. The poem is confessedly mystical, relating to the pure and affectionate intercourse between the Deity and human souls ; and is capable of a very extended comment, to illustrate its phraseology, and explain its almost numberless allusions to the mythological system of the Hindoos.

But the chief design of its introduction here is to illustrate the phraseology of the SONG OF SONGS. The most superficial reader cannot but be struck with the similarity of the language of the metaphors and imagery. There are few turns of thought in the Song of Songs that may not find a parallel in the Gita Govinda ; and even the strongly impassioned language of Solomon may be everywhere supported by that of Jayadeva, and vice versa. Could it be proved that the love between Christ and the Church were really the subject of the Canticles, the Gita Govinda might be applied with the utmost success to illustrate and explain all its imagery, and all its allusions : but we have no key to unlock its reference ; no data to which we can confidently refer ; and though it be generally allowed to be a mystic song, yet all interpreters follow their own creed in its explanation ; and it is only on the general subject that any two of them agree. As I am not satisfied that the common method used in its interpretation is either correct or genuine, I have simply avoided the rocks on which others have been wrecked, but have constructed no chart according to which a more prosperous voyage might be projected.

The late learned and pious Mr. Romaine seems to have thought that a competent knowledge of the original language might lead to its proper illustration; and is indignant at those who have attempted its explanation without this necessary qualification. Of his knowledge of the sacred language no man doubts. I, also, have brought some acquaintance with the original to bear on the subject; but, though perhaps as well acquainted with the meaning of the words as Mr. Romaine himself, I have not been able to discover his system in the poem; and I dare not by conjecture put a meaning on any thing that professes to be a revelation from God. I respect many of its interpreters for their piety and learning, but I cannot follow their steps; they have not proved to me that Solomon's Song refers to the love of Christ and his Church. Let this be my apology with the candid reader for not entering into a more extended comment on this extraordinary book.

ADAM CLARKE.

London, May 1, 1823.

To ascertain some of the latter PARTS of this poem, I have been obliged to trust to my own judgment; as Sir William Jones, from whom I have borrowed these, had not marked any division; and I have had the original of the four first PARTS only.

As to the old version of the Canticles which I have introduced, the reader will be pleased to observe, it is that which was used by our forefathers before and after the reformation: one word of which I would not presume to alter or change. It is sacred both by age and use
