IT has been regretted, that among ft the variety of new books which every day make their appearance, there should be so very few which are at all calculated for the use and improvement of the youth in the lower classes of life.

A few writers, however, have made it their bufiness particularly to confider them; and, in this way, not many have been more diffinguished than the worthy author from whose works the following little book is chiefly extracted. Mr. Hanway has written professedly for the poor, and his memory will live and be respected in the character of Farmer Trueman (and as having also been the promoter of many excellent charities) long after the period when all worldly diffinctions will have ceased to be of any value,

DISCOURSE I.

WELL, MARY, you have feen the good lady, Mrs. — : if the approves of you, I hope you will like to ferve her. Come, fit down; I have much to fay to you, if my heart is not too full.

Your dear mother is gone before me, and has left me to act for her; and happy it is for you that I am alive; for young women, particularly of your condition in life, when left parentlefs, are fo much at their own difpofal, that they often difpofe of themfelves very badly.

Methinks, MARY, a feparation after feventeen years tender acquaintance with thee, even from thy birth, is like parting with the blood that ftreams through my heart, efpecially as thou art going into a world thou art not fo well acquainted with as I am. Believe me it is a world full of danger; yet, if thou haft the wifdom, whenever poffible, to avoid, and the fortitude, when unavoidable, to withftand, the affaults of temptation, then will thy virtue be confirmed, thou wilt enjoy the heart-felt tranquillity of an approving confeience, and wilt feel the force of that beautiful fentiment of the pfalmift, " Great " is the peace they have who love thy law, O " God !"

Remember,

Remember, MARY, thou haft a Father befides me, a far greater and better, to whole care I recommend thee; and if thou couldft but always bear in mind that his eye is ever upon thee, that with him " the night is clear as the day," and hence learn to act always in his holy prefence ; and to afk thy-" felf continually, "Will not fuch company, will not fuch amufement, lead me into fin? Durft I folemnly alk of God to profper fuch or fuch an undertaking?". Then would my heart reft affured that thou would ft efcape the evil that is in the world; for those who walk in his fear he hath gracioufly promised never to forfake. O God; preferve my -child !! keep ber from prefumptuous fins; and cleanfe her from those secret faults which cleave to our imperfect nature; and make ber acceptable to thee, whom I have fought to ferve, by breeding up my children in tby fear.

You cannot eafily conceive how dear you are to me; but know, my daughter, that while I employ my thoughts and indulge my anxious withes to preferve you, I alfo confult my own happinefs with regard to both worlds : fo hath the wifdom of the Almighty ordained, that good intentions and good actions are ever felf-rewarded.

Confider, my dear MARY, that whether you look up to heaven, or down upon the earth, if your thoughts are not diffipated like the thoughts of a child, you will fee infinite reafon to adore your Maker. There

There is nothing to difcourage you in the duty of , prayer; there is no bodily labour in the difcharge of it, unlefs it is fpun out beyond meafure, which it never ought to be. All rational exercises of religion would be highly pleafant, were not men extremely degenerate. Far indeed from confidering it as a tafk," I hope you will make fuch progrefs in the fear and in the love of God, as to know by experience that prayer is a very great privilege. I affure you, MARY, that when I retire, and pour out my heart in the prefence of that Being to whofe goodnefs I am indebted for every thing I poffefs, and upon whofe favour hangs every future hope; I affure you, MARY, that those are the happiest moments of my life. Even contrition for past offences, and forrow for innumerable remaining infirmities, when accompanied by deep humility and due refignation of mind, diffuse over it a sweetnefs, a calm ferenity of fpirit, which the little interefts of the prefent paffing fcene, its profperities or its adverfities, can neither give, nor, in any outward circumstances, however afflicting, can wholly take away.

The gracious and awful prefence of God, and the continuance of his bleffing towards you, is not only neceffary to your fuccefs, but alfo to your very being. When I go into my fields, MARY, I look up with joy towards the heavens; but where the fupendous height of them ends, is paft fearching out out: I can only adore, and wonder! When I arife to my work, and behold the glorious appearance of the fun, I confider it as a "marvellous infirument of the work of the moft High" and eternal God. When I behold its effects flown by day, I rejoice. When I confider it as the means whereby my blood circulates in my veins, and gives motion to my pulfe and heart, I fall down in gratitude, not to the fun, but to bim that made it and rules its power. This alfo is the infirument which animates even the clods of the earth, making the grain floot from its bofom, and in due time bringing it to maturity, for the ufe of man. Were it kept bound in the winter's froft, I need not tell you that my labour in fowing would be loft.

But what is this compared to the beauty of the heavens and the clear firmament, when we enjoy fine weather? Is not your heart enraptured when you confider whofe handy-work it is? Do not the fpring and fummer charm you with the melody of birds, the verdure of the earth, and the refrething ftream? Can you fee a rainbow and not praife him that made it? "Very beautiful it is in the brightnefs thereof: it compaffeth the heavens about with a glorious circle, and the hand of the Moft High hath bended it." Haft thou not confidered how often the fhowers refresh the earth when it is weary with drought, and, as they fall, bring with them marrow and fatnefs to cheer the hearts of 8 men men and beafts? The fnow allo bringeth plenty on the earth by the manure contained in it. "Asbirds flying, the Almighty feattereth it, and the falling down thereof is as the lightning of the grafshoppers. The eye marvelleth at the beauty of the whitenefs thereof, and the heart is aftonifhed at the raining of it." And haft thou never flood in religious reverence, though I hope with no childifh fears or foolifh dreads, at the noife of thunder, and ftorms, which make as it were this globe of earth to tremble? But when the lightnings come with aftonifhing fwiftnefs, art thou not/ftruck with awe? Great, O Lord, and wonderful are thy works !

As the day declares the glory and power of God, fo at night, when you retire to refrefir your wearied limbs, confider every ftar hung out as a lamp to fhew you his marvellous works. Confider that he alfo made the moon "to ferve in her feafon" (as the months roll round) "for a declaration of time," and the fign that time itfelf will have an end.

All these wonders in the heavens remain in no lefs aftonishing order, " and never faint in their watches." They move at the commandment of the most High, and without his wife and incomprehensible direction we mortals could not exist. We should be devoured by fire, or drowned in water, or chilled to death by cold. Thou, my child, wouldest fall like a leaf in autumn; even in the spring and bloom of thy life.

B

Leara

Learn then, not by belief only, but by practice, and a habit of thinking, that God is all in all. "When you glorify the Lord, exalt him as much as you can, for he will ever far exceed; and when you exalt him, put forth all your firength and be not weary." Our praife is grateful, though it be weak. O my daughter, be is all in all. "He hath made all things, and to the godly he hath given wifdom."

Thus far you may judge from what you fee and hear, and furely blind are those who will not fee the glory of God displayed in his works; and deaf, when they will not hear his voice, either of reason or faith, though these proclaim their commission as received from heaven.

ABOVE all things I charge you, my daughter, to pay a first regard and reverence to the fabbath of the Lord. Let this be one of your first concerns. and remember that the fabbath is of divine appointment.

The neglect of this day, in all civilized countries, has been generally the great inlet to all manner of wickednefs. It were eafy by a variety of arguments to prove that wherever the fabbath is broken, a whole tide of wickedness will flow in at the breach. And as God has bleffed this day and ballowed it, fo they unblefs themfelves who profane it; and the keeping it holy is one of the great duties of both-Jew and Chriftian.

It is the neglect or abufe of the fabbath to which we may impute many of the evils under which our country labours, in respect to fobriety and good difcipline, reverence for laws, and fuch a regular uniform conduct as becomes good fubjects and good chriftians.

Rejoice then at the return of the fabbath, not fo much that you reft from your labour, as I hope you will be permitted to do, but that you have fo' fair an opportunity of offering your heart to your maker. The

The Almighty has declared, that he is pleafed with the incenfe of prayer and praife, offered by numbers of his rational creatures affembled for the fame purpole, and to make joint-fupplications for mercy for their offences. Go then with gladnefs to the house of God, not only to worflip him, but to hear his word from the mouth of his ministers. Our own hearts: are deceitful, but lie well affured? that: those who have pleasure in praying to. God,. and put their truft in him when they pray, infleade of flying from his house, they will fly to it as the place of their highest comfort and joy :: praise and thankfgiving will be their entertainment, and they will pour out their hearts in humble acknowledgement of their fins paft, and renew their refolutions of amendment:

The first and greatest object of religion, next to the belief in God, is to worship him. Now whether you do this in public or in private, take the wife man's advice: " Before thou prayest, prepare thyself, and be not as one that tempteth the Lord." Remember also that there are two branches of devotion, fupplication and praise: The first is the confession of fin and misery, and petition for relief; the last is an angelical and heavenly duty. The difficution is obvious, but I fear it is not made fo often as it should be, and the reason is but too plain; people in general are not sufficiently attentive to their prayers; they utter words; but do not therefore pray.

The

The duty of attending divine worfhip being required of all christians without distinction of perfons, those who take the liberty to dispense with it, and feldom appear at the house of prayer, are generally ignorant and abandoned wretches, who loiter about feeking a miserable diversion of their thoughts, having fearcely ever meditated on the being of a God.

 (\circ)

As God has made a feparation of the fabbath-day to himfelf, to diffinguifh it by peculiar acts of devotion and religion, and it is fo happy a fence againft impiety, it is a fad inftance of the ignorance and irreligion of the prefent age, to fee it fo univerfally diffregarded: neither is it fufficient merely to attend public worfhip; for furely to fpend the remainder of that day in unmeaning diffipation and unprofitable vifiting, is not to keep it holy (that is, feparate or appropriate to purpofes of religion) but, to fay the leaft, does much more defeat the gracious intention for which it was inftituted (namely, to call our thoughts to the things of God and our own everlafting interefts) than if it were fpent in the regular exercise of our daily calling.

God requires our obedience; but it is one argument, amongft a great many others, of his infinitegoodnefs, that he does not require it in any inftance, where it will not eventually promote our own happinefs, and exalt our character. He requires, indeed, that we fhould fometimes deny ourfelves a prefent indulgence or amufement, but then it is only in cafes where fuch prefent indulgence or amufement would be hurtful to ourfelves or others, or would in its confequences be prejudicial to our more important and everlafting interests. Well therefore might the Pfalmist cry out, "Blefs the Lord, O my foul, and forget not all bis benefits. Who forgivetb all thine iniquities, and healetball thy difeafes. Who redeemeth thy life from defiruction, and crowneth there with loving-kindnefs, and tender mercies. Who filletb thy mouth with good things, fo that thy youth is renewed as the eagle." Thy devotion should indeed fly on the wings of love to the God that made thee.

It is the crime and misfortune of people in our condition, and perhaps of our betters alfo, that when we nicet to worfhip God, we do not generally addrefs him with that awe and homage which become rational creatures, and, as we justly style ourfelves, miserable finners. My dear MARY, endeayour to imprefs your mind with fome fuitable ideas (yet imperfect and inadequate they must ever be) of his boundlefs grandeur and transcendent excellence; and remember that however faulty fome of our fuperiors may be in their flations, the greater part of us are generally worfe in ours, and therefore we fhould mend our own manners. There are many who know their duty, yet do not practife it ; but when our betters do not fhew us an example, it is in our power to put them to the blufh.

The falfe notions, joined to the rank hyporify, of fome of the Jews, in our Saviour's days, ran fo high, that they pretended to be much fcandalized at his doing works of mercy on the fabbath-day. This he reprehended with feverity, leaving us a filent leffon, that fuch employment ought not to be deemed as labour. Works of neceffity are alfo warrantable, fuch as pulling the ox out of the pit. But what fhall we fay of thofe, who, having much time on their hands on this day, when the feafon will not permit them to walk abroad; employ themfelves about any thing, rather than in reading the foriptures and pious and infractive books? Alas, how wretchedly do they nurder their time !

An idle perfon at any time is a bad fight; but abfence from the great bufinefs of the fabbath, and during divine fervice, is monftrous indeed !

DISCOURSE III.

OUR difcourfe yesterday was very ferious, MARY, but I did not finish what I had to fay. Indeed it demanded great attention, for it was in effect nothing lefs than a lesson of instruction to prepare for eternity.

What a deplorable condition are those in, who live all their days as without God ! and those who do not pray to him cannot be faid to live with him. How grievoully painful it is to the human heart, not rendered callous by the habit of wickedness, to think of being afloat in a wide-fea, without provifion, compafs, or ballaft; toffed by the tremendous. billows, and driven by tempeftuous winds, uncertain whether to fink in the profound abyfs, or be dashed against the rocks; or perish by some more dreadful accident ! Yet, this is their unhappy cafe, who never feek to become acquainted with, or toobtain the favour of, God. This is their fituation, who live as it were without him; and, however they may be at prefent engroffed by the vanities and false pleasures of the world, believe me, they will feel, and fully comprehend, the wretchednefs of their condition, when it is too late. May you, my child, never be amongst this number !

On the other hand, those who make it their conftant endeavour to obey the commands of God, and

to:

to worfhip him in fpirit and in truth, gain fuch a filial truft and confidence in his goodnefs, knowing that all their interefts, prefent and future, and the interefts of thofe whom they love, are perfectly fafe in his hands, that they have fearcely any remaining folicitude, fave only to do their duty; and what was it but a temper of mind like this that enabled fomany perfons, recorded in the feriptures, and other histories of the greatest authority, to triumph even in death, fubmitting cheerfully to the torture, when the cause of religion called them to maintain the truth, and to feal it with their blood ?

Prayer is an intercourfe between our heavenly, father, and our own hearts, and therefore it is impossible to worship him acceptably, but in fpirit, and in truth. This is fo agreeable to the common fense of mankind, that it is very easy to understand why mere words, in which the heart hath no share, are called the facrifice of fools, who confider not that they do evil.

The pious Archbishop SHARP tells us, "Prayer ought to be the continual exercise of life; forit is to the foul, what meat and drink are to our bodies, their repast, their support, their nourishment. Prayer is the great universal instrument by which we fetch down bleffings from above, and become posses of whatever we want. Prayer is our defence and prefervative against fin, and against temptation. It is the wings of our fouls, whereby:

we raife ourfelves up above this lower world to the God above, with whom while we therein converfe, we become the more transformed into his nature. Whatever anticipations of heaven there, be on earth; whatever foretaftes we chriftians have in these bodies, of the happines of eternity, they are all heightened and improved by the means of prayer."

Confider the neceffity of being as active in your religious duties, as in any other : this is a matter of the highest moment. The laziness which occafionally invades a great part of mankind, may happen fometimes to keep you fo long in your bed, as to create hurry and diffipation of thought, by fudden calls to your duty, which may prevent your morning-prayers ; and you will fet about your bufinefs without having offered up your devotion to the . Almighty. When this is the cafe, as foon as you recollect, repair the fault immediately in the beft. manner you can. We may pray in thought, nay even in words, without acquainting the world what we are about. If, after recollecting, you decline doing your duty, and any evil fhould befal you during the day, you will fuffer this double felf-reproach, that you first omitted your duty, and then increafed your guilt by neglecting to afk for the protection of heaven: you fuffered bufinefs, or fome trifling object of amufement, to poffefs your mind, in preference to the God who made you. And if

no

no diffinguished misfortune should happen to you on that day, you will be the more subject to the omission on another day, and accumulate your guilt, and your fins to be repented of. Nothing is more true in general, than that the omission of good is the commission of evil, and it is true in this instance.

Be therefore fure of your morning prayer, and rife early that you be not interrupted in this duty. Habit will foon render it familiar, and you will receive fome part of your reward in the benefits of early rifing, which I need not tell you who are accuftomed to it.

There is most respect, decency, and propriety in praying on our knees. Prayers in bed are usually called ejaculations, as when we are just falling into the arms of the death of sleep, or rising again, as it were from the grave, when we awake.

Make as fure of your evening prayer as of your bodily reft, without which you would die.

My maîter once told me, that it is a proverb among the Hollanders, who are a bufy nation, that "no one ever lofes any time by praying, or is the poorer for giving alms." The first part is very obvious, and the last may be easily reconciled, where prudence is exercised.

Among various excufes for negligence, you will hear fome filly mortals plead want of time. This is as falle in fact, as it is abfurd in opinion; for, if you you fhould be interrupted in falling on your knees in fecret, pray, as I have just mentioned, fecretly, as you fit, or walk, or fland, or work. But at all times, when you pray, collect your thoughts, that your heart may keep pace with your tongue.

This is as effential a duty as it is to pray at all; and for the fame reafon, thort prayers are preferable to long ones.

Our prayers are our true and faithful friends, who will never forfake us. They are our guardianangels. We may enjoy the happinels and advantage of their company in a palace or a dungeon; and without their aid we cannot have the leaft fecurity that we fhall be conflant to God; live like believers in him; or be obedient to the laws of Chrift. If you do not feek for the mercy of God, you cannot expect to find it. You are commanded to feek, and promifed that you fhall find, if you do feek; but not, whether you feek or no:

Confider, my dear MARY, the flate of human life, and the dangers which furround you, and all the children of men. We are all fubject, every day and every hour, to pain and forrow, ficknefs and death; and fhould live prepared for whatever a day may bring forth. We are fubject to a greater evil than the certainty of death; we are fubject to fin, and therefore muft take heed, whilft we think we fland, that we do not fall. You are fure that life muft end, in a few uncertain years. It is impoffible, poffible, being in your right mind, that you flould not be 'anxious for the event; 'what is to become of you, through the numberless ages of eternity. We are all perfuaded that we have fouls, and believe they will be faved or must perifh." We are continually in hope or fear of fomething; and for the fame reafon that we believe in a flate of rewards and punifiments after death, our fears and hopes extend to objects beyond the grave. Every one knows this, who is not ftupid : what then can you do, to take out the fting of your fears, and to render your hopes not only comfortable, but joyfal? What can you do, but apply with all your heart and underftanding, with all your mind and all your firength, to God, befeeching him that he will fhew you the paths in which you ought to walk; and moreover by comparing together your own character, and the terms on which falvation is promifed in the gofpel, endeavour earneftly, fo to conduct yourfelf as to come within those terms, 'or, in the apostle's language, " to fecure to yourfelf a good foundation," and to " lay hold on eternal life."

. (17)

And, indeed, what is religion (of which prayer is one of the highest acts) but the knowledge of the most excellent truths, the contemplation of the most glorious objects, the hope of the most ravishing pleafures; and the practice of fuch duties as are most conducive to our happines? The Other

Be

Be well affured, MARY, and I think you have tried the experiment, that your inclination to ferve God faithfully in your thoughts, words, and actions, and your power of doing it, will increase in proportion as you rightly perform the duty of prayer. On the other hand, if you should forfake the paths of virtue, you will as certainly cease to look up to God, and your inclination to all goodness will daily decrease: of this I have known numberless fad and deplorable instances. Heaven preferve thee, my daughter !

DISCOURSE IV.

MANY of us are apt to fall into a fault which feems to proceed from a right principle, though not rightly underflood. Referve is in no inftance more proper than with regard to prayer; yet it is equally true, that a falfe referve oftentimes betrays the caufe of devotion. When people are afraid, or ashamed, of doing what is right, they are in the more danger of being led to do wrong. There is a kind of refolution to effentially neceffary to religion that it can hardly exift without it. We must be firm on all occafions in doing our duty, confidering it is an unchangeable obligation incumbent on all the children of men. You have heard of women, who in the first ages of christianity exposed themfelves to flames and tortures, rather than give up their integrity, and this with as conftant and intrepid a mind as the braveft man that ever lived. There is nothing great without conftancy : and it is our duty to poffefs our minds with fuch refolution, that as no fear of pain should affright, fo no. temptation to pleasure should entice us from our duty.' And without this habit of firmnefs and refolution, we fhall never be able to withftand the many temptations to do what is wrong, or to neglect what is right, that we shall meet with from the falfe C 2 maxims maxims and miftaken opinions that prevail in the world.

We are commanded, it is true, by our great Lord and Mafter, to pray in fecret, that we may not be feen of men ; that is, not to feek the praife of men, as the Pharifees did. You remember our Saviour expressly mentions, the grofs hypocrify of those people, in his time. However, do not turn! away from the meaning of your divine teacher, and act as if you were afhamed of being found on your knees. The confequence of childifh fear in this inftance is, that many get into an habitual neglect, and do not pray at all. If two perfons meet together, both well inclined, and both stimprous, or prejudiced to this opinion, they will both deeline doing their duty : and what a ridiculous, and at the fame time tragical figure will they make ! If they come to the point of never praying but at church, can it be expected they will be really attentive to their prayers when they are there? and can they pray at church without being feen ? Cuf-f tom makes it familiar to us, to avoid all human eyes. in private; but refolution and attention to the great. bufinefs of devotion should render us superior to all interruption or furprife, when we are praying.

Your poor mother, good as fhe was, yet it was a long time before the furmounted that fallemodefly in which the was bred, which made it feem criminal in her eyes, to be feen on her knees; but I happily happily convinced her, that it was our mutual fecurity not to neglect the duty of prayer; and that as we retired to reft and rofe, at the fame hour, fowe fhould likewife offer up the incenfe of our prayers, with one heart and mind.

You are fenfible, that in order to fix any object on the mind, we must think, or read, or difcourfe about it. The two last include the first; but there is a peculiar charm in the conversation of fensible. pious friends; we are fure of their heart, My master used to fay, that according to a Persian proverb, "the conversation of a friend brightens the eyes." The familiar difcourse of a virtuous friend is pleafing and advantageous; but of all conversations, that is the most interesting which leads us into the path of everlafting happinefs. Such as this can hardly come from any, but the good and wife : those only deferve the name of friends, who are true to their own hearts, and confess the power of religion ; perfons of a different turn can only do us kindneffes, and be agreeable companions. If you would be wife, you must fometimes fubmit to be thought foolifh. The first thing a wife man confiders is the end of his being, the next how he fhall attain that end; and you may be well affured. whatever tends to promote the caufe of true religion goes fo far in the attainment of the true end of life. and exalts human nature. Yet alas, MARY, whether it be amongst us or the great vulgar; C a whether whether, it, be from fear of the imputation of oftentation, or hypocrify, or to avoid any other thing which the world leaft applauds, I do not find that it is a cuftom or fashion among the gentry to favany thing at all about devotion, neither as it relates to themfelves nor their fervants. Some of the truly zealous, and fome of the enthufiaftic part of ns talk of it occasionally ; but for want of diffinguilling true zeal from enthaliafan, which is as different as light from darknefs, most people are apt to draw one common conclusion, namely, thatthose who speak of piety are not pious, in the fense, that piety is allowed to be amiable, good, and praife-worthy. My mafter used fometimes to give. his fentiments in company, in a rational and familiar manner, like a man and a christian, as Ithought; but I am forry to tell thee, MARY, his acquaintance, who were otherwise fober people, were generally as filent as the grave, as if it were a matter of no moment to them, or, that they were totally incapable of uttering a fingle word on the fubject, with any propriety.

In your tender, years, you liftened to my difcourfe, as if you meant to engrave every word on your heart: and when you prayed, you looked up to heaven, feeming to feel the force of your words, and to mean what you faid. Cherifh this outfom, and hold it neareft to your heart. You have fometimes feen your mother on her knees, with ftreaming ing eyes, entreating the Almighty to pity your poverty and your fex, and thield your perfon from the mercilefs hands of the vile deftroyers of female innocence. You are now come to years of diferentian, and know your own danger; therefore you muft confider your own prayers as your fureft guard : and if you pray to your, heavenly father with real devotion; (let the world go as it may) he who heareth infecret will reward you openly.

Among the various helps of performing the duty of prayer, I reckon it one of the greateft to utter words flowly and folemnly, weighing their fenfe and meaning. Whether it be comfort or advantage, it must arise from a close attention to the object to whom you addrefs your prayers. Your attention must be kept awake, that you may neither tire nor wander in thought. Thefe infirmities are much alike, and human nature is much addicted to them, The more you perceive either of them, the more watchful you should be of yourfelf, and accommodate your prayers to your real powers of mind ; at the fame time, do not deceive yourfelf, and under a fond notion of an unavoidable defect, in this particular, become habitually negligent. Our hearts are more treacherous than we are apt to imagine. It is certain that a multitude of words will not/avail: but if you are indolent, cold, and unwilling to pray, you may think a few words are too many. OTHER LT. In

In fuch circumftances you cannot be faid to offer up your heart to God, be your words ever fo few.

A confciousness of the weakness of our nature. respecting our inability to expand the wings of ourdevotion beyond a certain measure, naturally creates fuch an humiliation of heart, as is one of the effential requifites of piety, and conflitutes a chief part of it. Family-prayer is another means to. help us in this duty of devotion. This feems to be a mutual fecurity to every one in the family, that they shall fay their prayers at certain times, whether it be once or twice in a day. If fuch prayer is properly repeated, it will roufe the powers of the mind, and conquer that coldnefs and unwillingnefs which. is fo apt to feize the heart in this inflance, if we, do not keep a strict watch over it. But fuch family-prayer is to much out of fashion, that you will rarely find it.

I fear that fervants receive but little benefit from their mafter or miftrefs in this inftance. They think it enough, that they have the proper authority over us as their fervants, and expect from us first juftice and fidelity; yet they feldom go fo far as to inform themfelves where the fervant learnt to be juft and faithful. The only folid fecurity for juffice or fidelity is founded-in religion: But if every mafter fuppofes his predeceffor performed his duty, young men and women, not duly taught by their parents, will be left to act at a hazard; and thus it happens, that that many fervants have little or no fense of moral or religious obligations.

"So' that you fee, "then, this great bufinels depends generally on yourfelf. Women are juftly called the devout fex ; and they are most diffinguished for piety, as well as for the duties of domeftic life; yet from a falfe delicacy, in which religion hath no fhare, I have observed, that some ladies have thought themfelves abfolved from all demands relative th family-prayer, because they were not married ; and yet I do not remember to have met a fingle word in the New Teftament which makes any fuel diffinction ; on the contrary, fome paffages Juppole fingle perfons most at liberty to promote the exercise of fuch religious duties; those who are married being obliged to obey their hufbands. You fee that people never want reafons, füch as they may be, for doing whatever they like, or for letting alone what is not agreeable to them, and for being inattentive to their eternal obligation of worthipping God under their own roof.

In the comparative view of private and public prayer, you ought to confider, that although it is the cuftom of the world to follow example, rather than precept or inftruction, it would be much fafer, in most cases, to follow inftruction. It is an indifpentible duty to worthip God in public; those who go to church merely from cuftom and decency, have feldom much inclination for devotion, public or private; and the fame authority which requires. public worfhip, requires private alfo. I " The prayer of the humble pierceth the clouds, and till he come nigh he will not be comforted.". This is not faid of public or private devotion, for it is supposed that the fame warmth and fincerity accompanies both. To pierce the clouds with our pravers, is a very, ftrong and beautiful expression; [and; it certainly. must be the importunity of our fupplications, where they come from the heart, directed by the underfanding, and attended with fervency and zeal, which alone can be supposed to reach the ears of the Almighty, or afford comfort or joy to the mind of man. Amidit all the buffle of the world, I confider that perfon as the bappiest of the children of men, whole addresses to God are the most acceptable.

If you fear God, you will be led to refpect the preachers of the gofpel. The wife man confiders it as a trial whether we love God or not, by our reverencing or forfaking his faithful minifters. And indeed it was natural for a wife man to draw this conclusion, becaufe in common life, in proportion as we love the mafter, we flew a proper regard to his fervants.

You and I now fland before the everlafting father, and fovereign of the univerfe, on a great and folemn occafion: very great to ourfelves, however infignificant to the world. As a father, I command you; as a friend, I entreat you; to pray conftantly and uniformly uniformly every morning and evening. Be affured, my dear daughter, it is the means which will bring you a bleffing and fuccefs in life; and without it you may eafily ftab my peace, and bring thefe grey-locks with forrow to the grave. If you purfue my maxims, and obey my precepts, though we fhould be vifited by the cold hand of adverfity, yet our lives may be comfortable; and deatb, when heaven fhall call us hence, will open a paffage to a joyful and glorious eternity.

DISCOURSE V.

· FL T. Dis. In . I

ADDED to the arguments already urged in favourof the duty of prayer, I must not omit to mention the example of Christ; and you know, MARY, what I have often told you, that your having been baptifed merely, will not entitle you to the glorious promifes of the gofpel; you must obey the commands of Christ, and in felf-government, piety to God, and benevolence to your fellow-creatures, you must endeavour to imitate his example. In the history of his life, we read often of his retiring to prayer. Luke v. 16. xi. 1.

This was that mighty prince, who made his triumphal entry into Jerufalem, not with the fplendid fhew of an earthly prince, to pleafe the fancies of men with a tinfel-glitter, but to fill the heart with joy, even to the hopes of heaven, and happinefs immortal. They fhouted "Hofannab to the Son of David. Bleffed is he that comet in the name of the Lord!"—Bleffed indeed was he to whom God had given power to open the eyes of the blind, who enabled the dumb to fing, and the lame to dance for joy. Yet fuch was the fatal blindnefs and perverfe difposition of the rulers of the Jews, that they condemned this glorious prince of Peace to die upon the crofs. And what heart can conceive. conceive, or what tongue can utter the dreadful feene then reprefented on the theatre of the world? This mighty prince and redeemer, this divine faviour, was buffeted, mocked and fpurned. He was dragged to execution like a felon, and nailed on the crofs. There his heart heaved with agony of pain, and not lefs with pity; for he cryed to God; Father forgive them, for they know not what they do ! He then inclined his head, and expired. You remember, MARY, what you have read in the New Teffament, upon this fubject; the earth trembled; the veil of the temple was rent; the rocks burft; many of the dead arofe, and appeared before men's eyes; all nature feemed for a time to be convulfed, and, as it were, expiring with the Son of God.

But what was the confequence of this unparalleled obflinacy and wickedness of the Jews, who were the voluntary infiruments of this act of cruelty and injuffice? Their famous city of Jerufalem, and their holy temple, which was of fuch immenfe value, were forty years after deftroyed by the Romans. Jerufalem is now in the hands of the Turks, and of very little moment, though once the pride of the whole earth. And as to the Jews themfelves, their flate was deftroyed, and the people difperfed over the earth; and now for near feventeen hundred years, the Almighty hath not permitted them to collect themfelves into a body, or form a government, being feattered in chriftian, mahametan, and pagan countries; manifesting to the whole earth the truth of the gospel of Christ. You see fome of their descendants, who live among us: they maintain to this day their particular customs and manners; they neither keep the fame fabbath day, nor eat the flesh of animals killed after the fame manner as ours. They do not mix with the world as foldiers, seamen, or husbandmen; they intermarry only among themselves: in a word, they fland as monuments to remind us of this great event, though themselves are unbelievers, and still look for that very Meffiab whom their forefathers erucified, as you declare in your belief.

THERE are fome of our condition, MARY, fo little inftructed in relation to prayer, that they do not diffinguish the belief, or declaration of what they believe, from an addrefs or prayer to the Almighty.' There is indeed this likenefs, that both are of a very ferious and folemn nature and require a very clofe attention to the fenfe of every word, that fufficient time be given for recollection, and affent of mind to the full meaning of them. This is the first step towards religion : The fecond is the knowledge of the commandments of God : The next thing is a firm and fteady refolution of obedience to fuch commandments; and laftly our prayers being added, imploring the divine affiftance : thefe obvious and plain operations of the mind mutually aid and fupport

Support each other, and employ their joint forces to combat fin and triumph over the world.

As you believe the refurrection of the dead, and the life everlatting, and that Chrift is appointed to judge the living and the dead; he will certainly judge you, and he will as certainly pardon or condemn you. If you thall have earneftly endeavoured to live according to your belief, and agreeably to the commandment of God, and the precepts of the gofpel, you will be happy for ever! really, truity, and fubitantially happy in the endlefs ages of etcrnity ! If you have not fo lived, and die impenitent, we have the fame authority to believe you will perifh everlaftingly !

AND now, before we leave this fubject, I must observe to you that it is trifling to talk of the religion of Chrift, and to pretend to be one of his followers, and not to remember him in whatever he hath commanded.

I have much reafon to fear there are many who live and die without receiving the facrament of the Lord's fupper. Some begin very late in life to receive it, and others leave it off very early. This negligence arifes from very wicked, or very foolifh reafons, or no reafons at all. People stand in awe of this folemnity, as of a very good thing; but do not partake of it, becaufe they think themfelves not good enough; and they act as if they were determined to be no better, or as if they did not think this this could be any means to make them better, though it is required by Chrift himfeff.

If I was to invite my neighbour to fup with me, and he exculed himfelf becaufe he was not in a cleanly condition, would not you be affonifhed that he did not fet about to wafh himfelf? But fuppofing that I were to furnifh him with the requifites for making himfelf clean, and he fhould ftill infift that he fhould not come; might I not fufpect that he was not heartily inclined to my friendfhip, and fought for reafons to excufe himfelf?

There is no miracle in the effects of this holy ordinance: it neither faves nor destroys, but as it operates on the hearts, the lives, and manners of men, like other religious duties.

Our Lord and Mafter, in whom we profefs to truft, invites us to his fupper; as upon another occafion, he fays, "Come unto me all ye who labour and are heavy-laden, and I will refrefh you." And do you think you can go to him, in true fincerity of heart, and not find refrefhment? He directs us, on this occafion, the moft folemn the world ever knew, to go. Hé, the Son of God, was going to fuffer a cruel and ignominious death, and commanded us to do this in remembrance of him; and do you think, while memory holds a place in your brain, you fhould forget him? He tells us why we fhould do this, and how it is to be done. He bids us receive the bread and wine in remembrance brance of his death and fufferings, of his body pierced and blood fpilt, as a token of his wonderful love towards us; and requires this memorial to be continued through every generation, until his coming again in glory.

Would any perfon in his right, mind refufe fuch an invitation from the greateft and beft friend in the world, upon fo vaft and important an occafion? Can any one decline coming to this heavenly entertainment, without a neglect, which is an affront to fo great a Lord of fo great a feaft? And if we confider the command, as from the great Captain of our falvation, is not our refufal to obey it of the fame nature as a foldier's defence, when he difobeys his commander?

As to the intention of this ordinance, you may confider it in these feveral views.

1. It is to fix and imprint on your mind, in a manner the most lasting, the remembrance of the death of Christ, as the strongest motive to your obedience.

2. It is a commemoration of his death, in z humble acknowledgement of its being the ground of your bope of eternal life.

3. It is a public declaration to the world of your faith in him, and that you on your part will endeavour to become holy as he was holy, and to continue down the *memory of his love to all gene*rations.

D3

4. It

4. It is a high expression of your thanks and gratitude to God for his unspeakable mercy in fending his fon into the world for the redemption of mankind from fin and death.

5. It is a confirmation, on your part, of the covenant which God hath made with us, and a thankful acceptance of those conditions of pardon which he has offered, and whereby we acknowledge and renew our obligations to obey him.

Now of all commands, it is natural to lay the greateft ftrefs upon those which are given us by our friends a little before their death, especially if we really love them, and they particularly defire it to be done in remembrance of them. Let us fuppole that the lady whom you are now going to ferve; by an aftonifhing mark of her love and compaffion for you, fhould preferve your life; fuppofe the thould not only fnatch you from the grave, but die herfelf in the attempt? Suppose likewife that the were to leave you a creditable maintenance upon the condition of your doing fome particular act eafily performed; would you not do it ? would not your neglect appear the blackeft ingratitude, whilft your folly would be the derifion of children, for you would lofe your fupport by a negligence which would plunge you into poverty, and give you the character of a mad-woman or an ideot? And yet, alas! what could fhe, or any mortal, do for you, or any other? fhe might fave your life for for a few days or years, and render that life comfortable, whilft it lafted; but here all her kindnefs muft end.

As to the matter which frightens fome, it ftands thus. St. Paul reminds us that as we have boufes to eat and drink in, we fhould not come to the houfe of God, and to the Lord's fupper, not diffinguishing a folemn act of religion from a common meal, which was the crime of fome of the Corintbians. Well might he tell them this was cating and drinking their own condemnation; which he interprets by faying that God would be provoked to inflict feveral kinds of judgments upon them, if they continued to all fo wicked a part. But what is this to the purpose of those childish and fantastical fears which a great part of us entertain in relation to the celebration of this act of devotion ? Solemn indeed it is, but when we fall down on our knees before God, or fend up our hearts to him in prayer, is not this alfo a folemn and awful duty? As well may we fay that we will never pray, because it requires thought and ferionfnefs, as that we will not receive the facrament, for fear of offending God. Believing it to be the command of Chrift, we offend God most furely by not receiving it, and if we are to come to the table of our Lord in charity with men, with an intention to lead a new life; do we not do just the fame thing when we pray? If not, we are guilty of mockery, for we implore implore the mercies of heaven, (as I have already obferved) upon the very terms and conditions of forgiving others; (which is far from being a hard talk). And as we always mean to repent, we mean to amend; and what is this but leading a new life?

.(35)

Let people then look into the Lord's-prayer, and it will flare them in the face; they will be aftonifhed how they could live fo long in neglect of the facrament, for fuch a reafon, and yet fay this prayer once or twice every day of their lives !

In regard to the frequency of receiving the facrament, there is no time exactly pointed out. The doing it frequently feems to be implied by the words of our Saviour, "Do this as oft as ye drink it in remembrance of me." For my own part I fee not how any Christian can decently turn his back on the Lord's table.

If you would maintain and keep yourfelf in a confiant general preparation for the holy communion; fo as always to be fit upon the flortest notice, to partake of it, (that is, if you would really endeavour to be a christian) be careful in the observation of these following rules.

1. Be diligent in your endeavours to know and understand the feveral parts of your duty to God, to men, and to your/felf, for which end you must be careful to make the best use you can of those means of instruction and knowledge which God has put into into your power; fuch as reading the holy feriptures, and other good books, or hearing them read; attending upon the public offices of preaching, catechizing, and the like. (a)

2. You muft, upon all occasions, be industrious and zealous in avoiding every fin, and to practice and perform every duty according to your ability and opportunity for the fame. (b)

3. You must very often think and meditate upon your ways, and all your particular practices, and examine whether or no they are agreeable to the rales of your duty; that whatever you find you have been deficient in, or done amis, you may take the better care to rectify and amend, for the time to come. (c)

For which end and purpole, this following eafy but very profitable tafk is recommended: namely, two or three times in the courfe of each day to carry your thoughts back, and confider what you have been thinking, or doing; and how you have fpent your time. As for example; afk yourfelf,

When first I awaked, did I think upon God, and recommend myself to his almighty care and protection? Did not wordly or finful thoughts first take posseffion of my heart?

(a) Prov. iv. 5. John v. 39. 2. Tim. iii. 15. John xiii. 17. (b) Tit. ii. 11.—14. Matt. vii. 21. Luke xii. 47. (r) Pfalm iv. 4.—and cxix. 59. Lam. iii. 40.

I was

I was lately in fuch and fuch company; how, and after what manner did I behave myfelf; were all my words and actions innocent, modeft, and fitting? Did I give no offence to God, or feandal to the world, by any thing which I either faid or did on that occafion? &c.

, Such queftions as thefe, if you would conftantly and ferioufly put home to your confeience, while things remain fresh in your memory, what a mighty influence would they have upon you, to restrain you from evil, and excite you to do that which is good, with joy and pleafure?

And as to particular preparation,

I. Whenever notice is given of the celebration of the holy communion, immediately refolve by no means to mifs that opportunity of commemorating the fufferings of your bleffed Lord and Saviour. But if you are careful every day, as you ought to be, to live as becomes a chriftian, you will not need any other preparation.

I would recommend to you, however, to remember that the whole duty of a christian is reducible to three heads; (a) and every time you receive the holy communion, you will do well to put, at least, these three questions feriously home to your confcience,

1. Do I effectually flow my love to God, by a due honour and respect to him in all my thoughts, words, and actions?

(a) Matt. xxii. 37. &c.

- 2. Have I a true and fincere love for myfelf: that is, do I love my foul better than my body? and am I more heartily concerned to fecure my everlatting happinefs in the world to come, than to compafs my pleafure or profit in this life?

3. Have I a real and fincere love for all mankind, without exception? And do I avoid hurting any perfon by word or deed where I can poffibly avoid it? And am I ready to do good to every one whatfoever, wherever I have ability and opportunity?

If you meditate on these three questions feriously for a little time, there is fearce any fin that you have been guilty of, but it will occur to you.

4. When by the examination of your confeience you have fet your fins in your view, and have feen what your particular deviations have been, then make your humble confeffion to Almighty God, and implore his affiftance to enable you for the future to be more obedient to his commands, and to live more like the difciple of the mafter by whofe holy name you are called.

In respect to your behaviour at the boly communion,

1. Strive, as at all other times in the worfhip of God, as much as you can to keep your mind intent and fixed upon what you are about; and lay afide not only all vain thoughts, but likewife all fuch as are impertinent to the prefent bufinefs.

2. Take

2. Take care to behave yourfelf with fuch outward decency, and compofednefs, as may be a fufficient token of that inward devotion and reverence which you bear in your heart, without gazing about, or any way unneceffarily moving your body, or whifpering to any one that is near you, or doing any thing of the like nature.

3. While the fervice is performing, join all along with the minifter and congregation, with your heart and thoughts lifted up to God.

4. Take care, likewife, to avoid all affectation, and not to behave yourfelf in fuch a manner as if you had a mind to be taken notice of for a perfon of extraordinary devotion. For which reafon, whatever private prayers or meditations you may have to offer to God, put them up in your thoughts alone, or let not your voice be heard.

While the bread and wine are diffributing, employ yourfelf with fuch meditations and prayers as thefe.

1. Bethink yourfelf what those fins are to which you have been most inclined; and, in the prefence of God, ferioufly and ftedfastly renew your refolutions of being careful to abstain from them for the time to come.

2. Confider what opportunities you ordinarily have for the doing of any good works, and fted-faftly purpofe to be diligent hereafter in making ufe of them.

3. To

3. Te this add the following Prayer:

"MERCIFUL God, affift me with the help of thy holy fpirit, that I may always keep those vows and good refolutions which thou haft enabled me to make; that I may never return to any of my former fins, but hereafter ferve thee faithfully in the conftant practice of virtue and religion, through Jefus Chrift our Lord. AMEN.

4. And here exprefs your charity, by putting up a prayer, for all mankind in this or the like form :

" LORD, if it be thy gracious will, extend thy mercy and compassion unto all mankind. Enlighten the minds of those that are ignorant, and move the wills of those that are obstinate, that they all may receive thy holy truth, and carefully live in the practice of it. Pardon my enemies, O God, and bring them, and all of us throughout the whole world, to true repentance, that we may all live righteoufly here, and, in the end, be happy with thee hereafter, through Jefus Chrift our Lord, AMEN.

-5. Then employ yourfelf with reading and meditating upon fome felect portions of the holy feripture, until fuch time as the minister is ready to proceed with the public office. I need not here transcribe any particular texts, but will leave you to make choice of fuch as are most agreeable to you. If you should be at a lofs, read the bundred and E nineteenth mineteenth pfalm, where you will eafily find proper matter enough to employ your devoutest thoughts upon this occasion.

6. When the fervice is ended and the congregation difinified, depart to your home or place of abode, and as foon as you have a convenient opportunity of retiring into fome private place, first look back, and confider whether or no, in the performance of this holy office, you have behaved yourfelf in all things as you ought to have done; and if you find that you have been any way flort or defective therein, refolve to take better care for the time to come.

7. And then conclude with this or the like prayer:

"LORD, I defire to return my most humble and hearty thanks to thee, for all thy bleffings both spiritual and temporal, which thou hast vouchfafed to me. At this time, particularly, I praife and blefs thy holy name, for the opportunity which thou hast this day given me of commemorating the sufferings and death of my bleffed Redeemer, and alfo participating in that holy ordinance which he has appointed. Lord pardon all the weakneffes and defects in the performance of my duty. And I befeech thee affift me with thy grace, that in the whole courfe of my life I may ever be careful to fulfil and perform those resolutions which I have made made of obeying the better for all time to conte, through Jefus Chrift our Lord. AMEN.

Moreover, endeavour, as the occasion arifes, to call to mind what you have thought, and faid, and done, before and after the holy communion : and beg God to affift you, that you may remember your Saviour with constant gratitude. And, that it may constantly restrain you from all manner of wickedness, upon the affault of any temptation, thus bethink yourfelf:

"At fuch a time I received the boly communion, and then I ferioufly refolved, and folemnly promifed to Almighty God, that I would heartily endeavour, in all points, to live like a chriftian. Shall I then, upon any account, lye, curfe, fwear, talk profanely, or obfcenely, commit any fin of uncleannefs, fleal, cheat, or do, or think, any manner of wickednefs? No: God forbid! I have engaged myfelf to God to amend my life, and to be another fort of perfon. And what can I expect, but wrath and indignation from bim, if knowingly or wilfully I flould violate my duty and those promifes which I fo deliberately and fledfafly made to bim?".

You have received the communion more than once: go on. I know too well, that fervants are generally extremely neglectful of this duty. If it fhould be the cafe with your fellow fervants, I charge you, as you love the name of Chrift, and E_2 defire defire to become his true disciple, that you do not follow their example, but firive to induce them to follow yours, in frequenting this holy ordinance, calculated to promote their prefent and future happinefs. And in regard to yourfelf, tell them what your father faid to you at parting. Remind them of the grofs abfurdity of fuppoling themfelves wifer than the wifelt, or more prudent than the fobereft or best of mankind : let them confider if the high imprudence, the great folly, the grofs iniquity, and the deftruction which waits the defpifers of religion, be better for them than peace, and confidence in the mercies of God, and hope of everlasting joy. Remind them that they are as answerable to God for their neglect, as other christians of the first rank and condition. They have actually fewer temptations than people who are rich; and though they know lefs, they know to much that ignorance cannot be admitted as a plea.

If your companions should not be awed by your ferioufness in this matter, but deride you as a young faint, you are not to reproach them, as if they were the contrary to young faints, but be patient, and go on unchanged in the way you are perfuaded is right; and mourn over their foolishness and obflinacy, who perhaps would shut their eyes if all the terrors of destruction should in array before them, and opened wide their tremendous jaws.

Do

Do your duty, I fay, and still hope that others will do theirs. Thus you will approve yourfelf worthy, and, in good time, receive your reward. What can you do more than express your forrow on this as on all other occafions, wherein men tranfgrefs and rebel against common fenfe, as well as the decrees of heaven ?

DISCOURSE VI.

You fee, my dear MARY, how much I intereft myfelf in your happinefs. God knows what I thall be able to do for thee, in point of provision, after my death. Thou art a child of providence; truft to it, using the means that providence hath pointed out. But above all things let me caution, thee never to expect folid durable happinefs from, any thing this world can give.

For my own part, I married the woman I loved' beyond all others in the world. For a while, nothing feemed wanting to complete my happinefs; and when you, my child, came into the world, my fancy reprefented to me that you would prove fo. good, I should have no reason to envy the greatest of mankind. Your mother became unhealthy: I fympathifed, in her pains and forrows; and all the; beautiful structure of my happiness was thrown down, and blown away like the duft of which I am. made. Soon after her death I loft my two little boys, your brothers. In my fancy they ftill hang round my neck, and their charming images live in my heart! Then fell my good old mafter! His laftkind words still found in my ears: it is true hemade provision for me; but I loved and honoured him him fo much, that I fuffered more anguifh at his death, than joy in his liberality. Indeed his kindnefs but added to my grief. Thefe forrows (and fome or other fuch all muft expect) threw a cloud over my brighteft days! Such however has been the goodnefs of God, in Jefus Chrift, that by enabling me to become in all things refigned to his will (who never afflicts his creatures but for their purification), I have, by degrees, attained fuch a peaceful ferenity of mind, fuch a freedom from undue anxiety, as the world and its purfuits can never give.

And, to a mind capable of enjoying it, does not every part of nature furnish matter for delight and gratitude? The grafs that grows in the fields; the leaves which shoot from the trees, and the fruit which they furnish; the growth of every plant, and every animal, is full of wonder! Where wilt thou find the hand of art which can give the cowflips fuch a yellow, or the violet fuch a blue? Hast thou confidered how beautifully the rofe is adorned, and how justly it is the emblem of the most captivating charms of female beauty? Nor is the apple or the peach less grateful to the eye. Have not thy fenses been often refreshed with the finell of new hay, and the fweet fragrance of herbs and flowers, and the blofloms of a thousand trees ?

Nor is it only in the vegetable world: the bleating flock furnifhes wool for the employment of many thoufands, who again provide cloathing for for millions more. This makes me think myfelf of fome importance; and, when I fee yon ruddy lafs drawing fircams of milk from the fwelled udder of the ufeful cow, methinks I am the infirument of heaven, in rearing the tender helplefs infant, whilft the drooping grandfather bleffes the hand that brings him milk.

- Survey the multitude of objects which providencecertainly intends for delight as well as ufe. When I behold thee feeding my poultry and my pigeons, I think, if a fparrow falleth not to the ground but by the knowledge and permiffion of the God of all, that he has honoured thee as the inftrument of his bounty, in feeding thefe birds which are fo ufeful to mankind. And if SOLOMON in all his glory was not arrayed like a lily of the field; what doft thou think of the natural beauty of the eye-fet feathers of the ftrutting peacock, or the fcarlet ornament of the prouder turkey ?- Thefe are alike the work of thy hands, O God fupreme! O MARY, when thous hearest the early crowing of the cock, dost thou not think of him who calls thee to a vigilant and active life ? If thou confiderelt not what bufiness thou haft on thy hand to-day, perhaps to-morrow ne'er will come. This bird is thy kind monitor ...

It is here we must enjoy the liberal feast that kind providence hath provided: here every tree, and every bush furnishes fomething to the common. flock. We might live without great cities, but they they could not fubfift without hufbandry. Nor do we barely live. See there the fragrant bean and pea in blofiom; do they not laugh and fing, and furnifh pleafure as well as food; whilft the chearful notes of birds on every tree fill the foul with gladnefs?

Is not this far beyond all the gay inventions of eity entertainments, where health fo often becomes a prey ? where fraud and enmity are fo frequently concealed under the garb of friendship and pretended love ? and men, bewildering and bewildered, often feek happinefs in paths which lead to mifery? Alas! our vices here in the country are alfo too big to be overlooked. We are often vain and foolifh; but pride and folly feem more contagious in great cities, where thou wilt find numbers who know not what to do with themfelves, or have fo little leifure from vain purfuits and empty joys, they hardly afford themfelves time to think what course is best to steer to prevent intemperance and preferve their lives. They fee not how rapidly life ebbs out in anxiety for things of no real value, whill the great bufine's of falvation grows heavy in proportion to their neglect of it.

It is true, my days have been chiefly fpent in the tumult and parade of great cities, where generally the worft as well as the beft part of a nation are affembled, and where vice is much eafier propagated than virtue. In fpite of all the filken robes, or lighted tapers which I have feen, or the melodious mufic I have heard, I never had fo many hours of true relifh of life as I now enjoy. Oftenhave I lamented the fate of my good mufters and their company. By meeting in fuch multitudes, they poifon themfelves; and in fearch of pleafure, and the diffipation created by a crowd, they at once rob themfelves of two of the choiceft of bleffings, fure air, and time for reflection.

or

(50) -

I do not mean to depreciate mafters or fervants, who are perhaps much wifer and better than myfelf: but in order to give thee right notions of a city life in great families, I will tell thee that I form my judgment from their real conduct.

When I was in fervice I had many opportunities: of making remarks: I often faw intereft, fancy, opinion, and above all, cuflom, govern fo much, and reafon fo little, that I hardly believed fome people were rational creatures. But let nothing difmay thee, my dear MARY! For although folly will never be put out of countenance whilft there are fo. many unwife people in the world, yet wifdom will always be juffified of her true children. What is right and fit for us in our feveral flations in this world, confidered as Beings on our paffage to eternity, will full be right and fit; and the good willfind fuch countenance in the world, as is fufficient. for their purpofe.

Thou,

Thou, MARY, must take thy lot in the world. Gladly would I retain thee as my partner in thefe my toils and comforts, and lead thee through the dangerous paths of life, had it not pleafed heaven to prefent fo excellent a lady to thee for a miftrefs. I hope the will be a guide, a teacher, and a friend. Alas, my dear MARY, there are not many fuch ; nor many fervants who know when they are well, or confider that flate of fervitude, wherein their morals and piety are most attended to, as the bell place they can be in. Whichever way I turn my thoughts, I difcover danger. Wert thou put out apprentice in some great city to an useful trade. with a view to a fuperior fortune, I know the world fo well, thou would t be more exposed than in a well regulated private family. Think of the instruction thou hast received, and I trust thou wilt be fafe. Ufe the means which God hath given thee, do thy duty, and he will be thy friend and thy defender.

DISCOURSE VII.

As providence feems determined that we muft part, let us improve every hour that remaineth, before the day comes; and hear me; O my daughter, with deep attention! Whether in forrow or in joy, in good fortune or in bad, death ere long will feparate us. Thou perchance wilt go to the land where all things are forgotten, before thou thinkeft of it: I muft go foon! Let us both prepare for that journey, as the laft thing which we fhall have to do. I need not tell thee, that even thefe tranfient minutes of our difcourfe, which I pafs with fo much pleafure in thy company, bring us fo much nearer to our end.

In the great view of immortality, what advantage can there be in living, but as we improve our time? Those days are lost, in which we do no good; and worfe than lost, in which we do evil. Whether alone, or in company, we must be provident of our time. We had better not live, than have bad thoughts, or spend our time in bad company. Those who seek for amusements which are either soliss or wicked, with a view to what they call killing of time, consider but little what a fad compliment they make make to a gueft, who, though we fhould court him with all the finiles of love, and all the tendernefs and refpect of friendship, is ever on the wing. There is no occasion to murder him to get quit of him. Yeflerday is already dead; to-morrow is not yet born; and what have we then to expect to-day? And shall one poor day create such diffres, to make us think of murdering our best friend? How quickly fly the hours from morn to noon, and from noon to night! and then we fall into the arms of sleep, which is the image of death ! How monstrous is it to treat with diffespect the best friend we have in the world! This is the cafe with those who abuse time.

Dear MARY, let me charge thee, as thou loveft thy tender father, to remember how difficult it is to be innocent, and at the fame time idle. If thou feekeft to be happy, be industrious. Is any thing more certain than that those who are properly idle people, are more troubled and perplexed what to do with their time, than the industrious can possibly be, on account of the hardest labour they perform. This is for the honour of industry. But it goes much further: it proves the gracious defign of providence by putting the rich and poor more upon an equality than either of them generally imagine. The poor fill up their time with work, fuch as is useful to themselves and the reft of mankind; and the rich, fuch as are not industrious, nor employed.

in ufeful occupations, are perpetually laying out what to do with to-morrow, and continually labouring in thought by what means they fhall fill up their time: they think they have a vaft fuperfluity, becaufe they cannot tell what to do with it. It is probable fuch will repent, as many a rich prodigal who has fquandered a large fortune, and been reduced to poverty, hath done. Those who underftand the value of time, treat it as prudent people do their money; instead of spending a great deal upon nothing that is ufeful, they make a little go a great way.

It is the right ufe and application of time which not only makes life long, but renders it pleafant alfo; efpecially when we are brought to delight in doing the will of God. What a fhocking thing is it, to hear people complain that their hours move heavily, when they fhould be working with their hands or performing fome duty of charity, reading fome pious or ufeful book, or doing fomething that will make them wifer and better than they were before ! They are fure the hour will come, when they would be glad-to part with all the wealth in the world, were they possible of it, in exchange for a fingle day.

And this brings to my mind the hiftory of a lady, once a great favourite of my mafter's, but on whom he could make no imprefiion in the days of her health, who defired to fee him when fhe fell dangeroufly geroufly ill. The interview affected, him much, and he committed the convertation to writing. The lady in queftion had many amiable qualities, but fhe followed the train of fair triflers, and was devoted to others inferior to herfelf in underftanding. She was fenfible, affable, and polite. Her frame was too tender to bear an inceffant change every night from hot to cold; and like many others the received her death's wound in a large affembly, which my mafter ufed to call a well dreffed mob.

When this poor lady found herfelf in danger, her eyes were opened. She was not ignorant of my mafter's great partiality for her. She confidered him as her friend, and thought well of his opinion; but as a proof of her inconfistency, the had not regarded it in practice. In this extremity, fhe defired the favour of feeing him. Though much difpleafed with her conduct, he readily attended on the mournful occasion. After some compliments, she faid; "You fee me here in great danger of dying, You have been very good to me on many occasions. I am fenfible of the fincerity with which you interefied yourfelf in the most important concern of my life. Would to God I had taken your advice ! How dreadful is it to live and die in folly ! I am not indeed confcious of any thing which the world condemns, but I now understand and feel what is meant by the world's being at ennity with God. How have I fquandered away my time, as if I meant to give up the hopes of immortality for the plaything of a child! Alas! my much honoured friend, what pleafure can be found fit for an immortal mind, if immortality is not regarded? O wifdom ! where was I, when I fhould have fought thee? The neglect of thy admonitions now aggravates my offences; why could I not different the truth as well as you? or rather why did I not.practice what I knew? I differend the truth, but was fo filly as to imagine (if I thought at all) that fuch as myfelf had a kind of privilege of exemption from the rules which you fo earneftly recommended, and now, how fhall I be fit for that happinefs to which I might once have attained?"

" My guilt confifted in devoting my time to vain amufements, and in neglecting the great bufinefs of eternity. And if it were even true that any one of these amufements, fingly taken, might have been innocent, yet now I fee clearly that to make them the bufinefs of my life was not innocent. I have flown a pernicious example of idlenefs and levity. O God, forgive me! I have fought for happinels in places of public refort, but never found Had I fought his glory, who is the first and it. greatest object, he who is the merciful father of mankind, I fhould now have been happy ! Alas ! how little did I think of that Saviour, whofe ex ample was fo unlike my practice ! I can fearcely perfuade myfelf I ferioufly believed the terms on which which he promifed immortal happiness to his followers. Here I feel the fting; it pains me bitterly; how shall I extract the venom? Tell me what I shall do: In what expressions shall I humble myself before God? Where shall I feek a supply for my expiring lamp, or purchase the heavenly incense of a pious heart? My time has winged its slight beyond the reach of mortal call. I have neglected constant, regular, fervent prayer. Tell me, I befeech, you, how shall I, with supon my head, now implore the mercy of heaven?"

O MARY; does not thy heart bleed at the recital? And does it not convince the of the importance of those truths I have been pointing out?"

Thofe who are much captivated with this world, or averfe to the thoughts of parting with it, generally reckon upon years, when they fhould reckon upon months, or weeks, or peradventure upon days. They banifh the thoughts of death, by confidering him as an enemy, who will not come, if he is not thought of: but this is far from being true. It often happens, when his mellengers, ficknefs or age, are at our doors, we do not ferioufly believe that he is coming. The reafon of this I apprehend to be, that he takes fuch a variety of forms, we cannot well diftinguifh him till we feel his dart; and therefore fo many make this a reafon for believing.that he is always at a diftance from them.

In the ordinary courfe of things, green fruit often falls by a blaft, or violence, or the various accidents to which it is fubject. This is the cafe of thofe who die in youth; but as fruit that is ripened by time, and its proper feafon, muft fall; fo the aged muft die. Death is the hufbandman that gathers us all in.

Perhaps it may administer to the effablishment of thy virtue, to know what I gathered from my mafter's books, confirmed by my observation, when I was young. Dost thou apprehend that thy father is now trading on the last fifth part of his flock of hife, as all men are who are past fifty? (a) Thou seeft me cheerful and in good spirits, but nature, the great agent of the Almighty, has sentenced me to death. I am one in four who are to die in five years. (b) It is true I do not know certainly, within five years of my own death; but this I know, that if I should live through five years, then a greater proportion than one in some other four, must die, as it were, in my place.

And what think you, MARY, is your hazard ? Hear, and be not difcomforted ! Your chance is near

(a) Of 1000 born, 785 are dead by the age of 50, being very near four in five, therefore only one remains.

(b) From 55 to 60, 31 in 173 die, which is near one in four.

one in five to die in fifteen years. (a) . Look round thee! See how fwift the feythe of death mows down the children of men. Figure to thyfelf the proceffion of human life: obferve the reality of what is paffing before thine eyes; behold the rich and the poor, the wife and the foolifh, the virtuous and the wicked, thofe who make much noife, and thofe who are never heard of beyond the circle of their acquaintance; they all march on together to one common grave, which is always open, and never full.

Thou, though yet fo young, muft, notwithflanding, have obferved, how quickly infants pafs into childhood, childhood into youth, youth into manhood, manhood into middle age; this again into what we call advanced years, and from thence how foon we appear in old age! This progreffion of life, to people of obfervation, appears anazingly quick. Thou heareft it from every one's mouth; Good God, is it poffible? it feems to be but yefterday that fuch an one was a child! It is poffible, for the fact is really fo.

The eldeft, as well as the youngeft of us, have defigns and projects, hopes and expectations, which require time for the execution, perhaps beyond

(a) This is founded on 502 of 15 years old r of those, by the time they reached 30, 94 were dead, fo that it comes to near one in five. yond the chance of our continuance in life; but in many cafes this is neceffary.

The folly and madnefs is to live in fin, and defer repentance, at the very moment that we fee fome one of our acquaintance drop almost every day, at every age, and knowing, as we do, that our knell must toll ere long.

What a buffle do we make about life, and how often forget the end and defign of it! It appears but a finall object, a mere fun-beam, playing in the air, difappearing as the light withdraws, to those who confider its duration in respect of eternity, though it may indeed appear confiderable to those who are not accustomed to extend their thoughts beyond it, for these have no other happines in prospect.

Every diffinet perfor flatters himfelf that he fhall not be of the number of thofe who die carly. Providence is indulgent to us: for though every day brings us nearer to our end, death never feems near: the hour being concealed from us, we enjoy this turn of mind; and fuffer no fruitlefs pain. O God, how manifeft is thy mercy and goodnefs, in all thy conduct towards man! Think of it, MARY, and adore him with a grateful heart. Whether thou fhalt die young, or live to old age, remember "that honourable age is not that which flandeth in length of time, nor that which is meafured by number number of years, but wildom is gray hair unto men, and an unfpotted life is old age." The wife man means that wildow which will teach thee to remember thy creator in the days of thy vouth, and to apply thy heart fo diligently to pleafe him, that he may receive thee into everlafting joy.

Let us be careful fo to conduct ourfelves, that we may not be difinherited for difobedience. Learn from fuch confiderations how highly valuable thou art to thyfelf. The great opportunity of improving in knowledge will be after this life; but the only opportunity of fitting ourfelves for that bleffednefs is now. This is the feed time; that is the harveft. If thou takeft care to improve this, thou art fufficiently fecure of the other; but if this be neglected, all is loft. I have lived long, and wifh, that thou fhouldst take advantage of my thoughts and experience; and now is thy age of learning. In a variety of inftances I feel and deplore how greatly I have erred; but this good, at leaft, I hope I may have reaped from it, to bear with patience the many infirmities of others, being myfelf fo very imperfect. The longer I live, and the more I fee of the world, its vanities, and follies; the more I feel myfelf weaned from it; and this will, I hope, be thy cafe when thou haft had the fame experience. In the mean time do thou endeavour to be every day more wife, and more virtuous; and never tire tire in doing all the good thou canft, in fpite of the folly and ingratitude thou wilt meet with. And although I fhould never meet the perfection after which my mind afpires, yet it is my ambition, as I know it to be my duty and intereft, to prefs forward " toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Jefus Chrift." and and the

I DID not finish yesterday all that I meant to fay on the interesting subject we were upon. Thou wilt probably see me foon a lump of inanimate clay; and with respect to this world, all my thoughts perished: But thou hast the happiness of knowing, with full assurance, how God hath declared by the holy feriptures, that death shall open a passage to eternity; a blessed eternity to the good, though to the wicked everlasting destruction. Those are not christians who do not believe in the promises made by Jesus Christ.

Keep thine eye continually on the judgement to come, and thou wilt govern thy life by the rules of reafon and religion. Think of the mifery of not being able to look backward without fhame, nor forward without terror. Think of that which will give thee comfort in the laft extremity, for that laft extremity will come, as furely as thou now liveft. My prayer is, "Grant, O father, and eternal God, that I may live the remainder of my days (whatever the number of them fhall be) in thy fear and to thy glory; and let me die the death of the righteous ! Further I implore thy favour and mercy to this my child, the choiceft object thou haft been pleafed pleafed to give me! Grant that the may form her life and manners on this great principle, that holinefs alone is acceptable in thy fight, and is therefore the fupreme good of mortals here below, in every flation which thou haft affigned them. . This petition I offer at thy throne, O God, in the name of thy fon Jefus Chrift !"

It may, with the greateft reafon, be afked of any one, who trembles at the thought of death, or is enamoured with the love of life-What is it that thou valuest life for ? Is it for riches ? These often make themfelves wings, and oftener prove the more immediate caufes of difeafe of body, and anguish of mind: they frequently create more cares, than extreme poverty. Is it for honours? These fade at the frown of princes, and as often at the capricious applaufe of the people. Happily for fuch as you and I, evils of this kind cannot reach us. Is it for beauty? This falls not to the lot of many, and often proves the parent of misfortune; and it is true, even to a proverb, whatever good or evil it hath occafioned, it is but a flower that withers away. Is it health that enchanteth thee? This is a bleffing indeed, but it is fubject to change, almost as the weather; and the ftrength which attends it always abates as life draws to its clofe.

Let it be the rule of thy life, to make up thy accounts every night. Confider, my daughter, what thou hast faid and done; nor let thy thoughts go unchaftifed.

unchaftifed. Thus wilt thou be able to ftate thy reckoning fairly; and, "if thy fins die before thee, thou wilt have nothing to do when death comes, but to die and fall afleep in peace."

It is natural to hope for length of days, for a long life is furchy a privilege, and when well improved is a great bleffing. If the prefent life may aptly be compared to the feed-time, then is a long life well fpent the feed-time prolonged; but to prefume upon it, and to tranfgrefs any one of the laws of God in expectation that there will be time enough afterwards for repentance, is to truft our whole fortune on a bottom which had wrecked its millions, and is indeed the extreme of madnefs and folly.

I have given thee many hints' concerning death : I hope fome of them at leaft will be of ufe to thee. I have often enquired how my friends and acquaintances went off the flage : not how much they died worth, which is the ufual quefiion, but what fentiments they appeared to have.

JONATHAN, whom thou remembereft, was an ahandoned profligate wretch, and cared not into whose debt he ran, nor what differition he lighted up, provided he could fatisfy his wants, and gratify his appetite and his pride. He had not a filver tongue, yet he had fo much wit and cunning in the art of making people believe he was in earneft, and fo much refolution in the execution of his projects, and fuch fkill in evading law, that he laughed at all the juffices of the peace in the county. The wickednefs of his mind flowed itfelf in a thoufand evil deeds : when he died, he did not feem fentible that he muft give any account. O miferable condition !

Not fo was RICHARD, though he had been guilty of many irregularities, and could not fatisfy his confeience on many accounts. I one day afked him why he was fo fad. I fhall never forget his anfwer: he faid, "The foul, my friend, is a moft ferious "thing, and it muft either be fad here for a moment, " or be fad for ever!" I have reafon to believe he died a penitent.

PETER was another of my acquaintance; he was a clever fellow, and fit for all manner of work; he had lively parts, and was active and laborious in whatever he undertook: his great blemifhes were inconftancy, difregard to truth, and the modern carelefs way of living. I faw him on his deathbed, and heard him fay, "Good God, what have I "been about, and where am I going?" From whence I hoped he was not devoid of fentiments of contrition.

It was much the fame with Efq. WILLIAM. Indeed he difcourfed with a reverend gentleman, concerning the immortality of the foul, and man's eternal flate; and weeping faid; "O my poor foul, "whither wilt thou go?" When his father came to visit him, he faid, "O sir, your kinducs batk "undone me; I abused the ample supply you gave me. "Were I to live my time again, I would feed on "bread and water, rather than pamper my passions, "to hurry me into such monstrous excesses."

Another gentleman, in this neighbourhood, who had been employed in many great offices for a number of years, in his laft moments faid, " After "fo many years experience in bufine,", noife, and fplen-"dor, I think the greatest initial visition is ferioufnets; the "beft physic, temperance; and the best estate, a good "confeience:" declaring that, were he to live over again the time he had fpent in the world, he would exchange the court for retirement, and the palace for an hour's enjoyment of God in his public worfhip; adding thefe words: "Now all things forfake "me, except my God, my duty, and my prayer."

I believe thou doft not remember NICHOLAS; he was a man who had maintained fome character in the world; but was much addicted to pleafure, and fenfual gratifications, forbidden by the law of Chrift. He did not underftand much of any fuch law, for he feldom went to church; and then it feemed to be rather to find fault, that in the fpirit of humility, to receive infruction. He hardly ever looked into the New Teftament; and I do not remember to have heard that he ever went to the Lord's fupper. Upon the whole, it can with no propriety be faid, that he was a wife man: nor did it appear, when he died, that he had any faith in Chrift, and confequently was not a chriftian. Indeed he feemed much confufed in thought, and faid, (as my other acquaintance, whom I have mentioned) Good God, where am I going ?- From whence you may judge that he believed in a God, and a future flate, though he feemed to have no folid foundation whereon to build his hopes, or difpel his fears. This must ever be the cafe of thofe who live in the contempt or neglect of the holy for pures, and the commandments of Chrift.

I underflood from Sir RALPH's Butler, a few months before his mafter died, that he defired the reverend minister to make extracts out of the facred writings on the plaineft and most exact way of making his peace with God; obferving with a figh, " how few men confider to what end they are born into " the world, till they are near the time of leaving it." Sir RALPH had many virtues, but thou feeft how miferably poor he was, with all his weath; and how ignorant, with all his learning.

His intimate friend, the generous Sir GEORGE, with his laft breath, fpoke to his friends thefe memorable words : "Alas, my friends, the truess bequess I can make to you, is to entreat that you will govern your wills and affections by the will and word of God. I have lived in what is called the highess part of life, yet in me you may behold the end of this world, and all its vanities. I repent of all my life, but the the part of it I spent in communion will God, and doing good !"

The other day, when I went to fee my acquaintance PHILIP, thinking him on his death-bed, I afked him, if be thought of God? I am fhocked when I recollect his anfwer; he faid, "O it is not come to that yet." Still he flattered himfelf with a continuance in life; and being fo much eftranged from religion, he fondly imagined, one Lord have mercy on me? when his breath was departing from him, would be fufficient: and yet this man had often been advifed by our worthy curate, to amend his wicked and carelefs life, and read the foriptures.

When Mr. Abraham enquired of the minister, how he should proceed to make his peace with God, he gave this advice: "Read the New Testament, there you will find the words of eternal life; this book bath God for its author, falvation for its end, and truth without any mixture of error for its matter." Thrice happy are those who read that book with care, and learn that divine charity, which covereth the multitude of human infirmities.

My coufin THOMAS, long before his death, often told me his opinion, that charity in its full meaning, and rightly underftood, contained all chriftian graces: he faid, "thofe who have not this divine principle have no good in them." His piety kept pace with his charity: I believe he died the death of the righteous. Thefe laft are ftriking proofs of the advantage of virtue.

IN regard to thy fex, MARY, I cannot tell thee fo much of them as of my own; and perhaps there is not fo much to tell of their difference of characters, and difference of behaviour in their laft I believe the lives of women are comparahours. tively more free from atrocious guilt; and that from a habit of obedience, they live more fubmiffively to the decrees of heaven : perhaps, being lefs deeply engaged in views of avarice and ambition, and not fubject to fuch a variety of temptations, they may be chiefly in danger from pride or vanity; which, however, in their confequences, lead to hatred and envy, and many other vices extremely heinous, although, not being fo confpicuous, they are mighty apt in every flation to be overlooked, or not difcovered, by the mind where they have gained the afcendancy.

My coufin LUCY fell a facrifice to the laft of thefe. She was one among the many thoufands who have fome virtues blended with many faults; the could not properly be called vicious, but the was very far from being virtuous: in thort, the did not act as if the remembered her end, and therefore could hardly avoid doing amits. She feemed feemed to delight only in mirth and feftivity, mulic, dancing, cards, public flows, &c. Thus inftead of improving her understanding, correcting her will, and becoming more attentive to admonition, and learning to be humble, devout, and uleful, fhe foon acquired the reputation of a giddy girl. In the fame degree that fhe neglected thefe duties, they became tafflefs and infipid, and fhe had no heart for them. Having forgotten wherein her higheft excellency confifted, fhe could neither look back with any true fatisfaction, nor forward with any joyful confidence. She thought very little of any thing, but of the amufements of the prefent moment; and I cannot fay flie ever appeared to be much difturbed. Death at length furprifed her; and furprifed we all must be, if we do not live as if the prefent day might be the last our eyes will ever vifit. She went through the common ceremonies of phyficians, nurfes, and friends, with as much decency as generally attends a deathbed, where the chief concern is to administer medicines to the body. God forbid that I should fit in judgment on her; but neither could I ever find any folid foundation whereon to reft my hopes. She feemed to die as fhe had lived, in a flate of infenfibility.

My mafter ufed to tell a ftory of a French lady, which always ftruck me as an inftance of true genetofity of fpirit. Happening to be bled by a furgeon, who had entertained a fecret paffion for her, the condition of the lady being much fuperior to his; upon uncovering her arm he was vifibly confused : This was obferved; however, with great affability fhe defired him to go on in his work; and he cut an artery, inftead of opening a-yein. He immediately difcovered his miftake, and the lady was as foon fenfible that the must die in confequence of it: but far from loading him with bitter reproaches, the faw with compation the anguith of the unhappy man, and fubmitted to providence. She went still further; for thinking this event would injure his reputation as a furgeon, fhe made a handfome provision for him in her will; and died with that greatnefs of mind, which a good underftanding, fupported by the noble fentiments of chriftian piety, and generofity infpires; Was not this, great? Doft think thou fhouldft have done the fame; under the like circumftances?

With all their imperfections; women are called the devout fex; and I have already remarked to thee, that there is nothing great and noble, even in martyrdom, wherein women have not been, in all ages, diftinguished. (a) Why

(a) Mrs. Afkew, (among many others) a fingle gentlewoman, aged 25, was cruelly perfecuted, and at laft fuffered martyrdom, being burnt in Smithfield, in the reign of Henry VIIIth. She died praying for her murderers.

Why, my dear MARY, fhouldft not thou be as ready to die for the glory of God, and the welfare of thine own foul, as the greatest of the daughters of, women ? Never fhall I forget the manner of thy dear mother's death. She feemed perfectly reconciled, as if the was happily arrived at her jour- ney's end, after travelling through the rough ways of penury, and weathering the ftorms of affliction. The truth is, the had lived an honeft and a religious life, her mind was in peace, the was full, of the hopes of the reward of the righteous, and the looked up to God with confidence in his mercy revealed to us by Jefus Chrift; the had conftantly and fledfaftly fixed her eye on a judgment to come, and this furnished her with fuch principles of action as can be learnt no other way. She had thought of death familiarly, and therefore fhe did not fear it, Indeed, fhe was fo truly pious and full of hope, that to my imagination in those early days, the appeared to afcend the clouds in triumph. O my daughter, may thy death, whene'er it comes, be like hers; I think thou wilt then most affuredly die the death of the righteous! Why do I wander back fo many years, and fet my wounds a bleeding? Thou, my child, art her image; May thy virtues be like hers, that thou mayeft at length fhine as the flars of heaven !

Thou

Thou remembereft AMELIA. This was a young woman of the most excellent disposition : her modefly could be equalled by nothing but the gracefulnefs of her fmiles, and the benignity of her temper. Her dutifulnefs to her parents, and their. judicious care and tendernefs were become famous. She was never feen to be at a lofs for employment, nor out of humour for any crofs accident. Her own paffions being always calm, fhe was a guide and monitor to all her acquaintance. Unpractifed in any art of falfehood or cunning, flattery or infinuation, by the refiftlels power of her difcourfe fue commanded the affections of all her acquaintance. She fung most fweetly; but fhe was never tempted to wakes, or fairs, or kept any company but fuch as her parents recommended. Her winning foftnels was attended with a turn of mind, as ferious as uncommon, and out of fashion. The fentiments the had committed to writing, which were, found after her death, abundantly proved how juftly fhe thought of her own diffolution, and how much her heart was devoted to her maker. And. as if heaven had marked her for its own, ere fhe had well feen twenty years, having filled up the measure of her virtue, she was called to the fociety of her kindred angels. O what a lofs was fuftained in her! Glad fhould I be, to fpeak fo well of any man of my acquaintance, who, having died died fo young, was poffelfed of fo much intrinfic worth!

Thou haft lately feen a fresh inftance how precarious life is, and how it ought to be fpent. I hope thou wilt remember it with thy expiring breath. 'Tis but the other day, thy much loved friend, and the companion of thy earliest days, AMELIA's cousin, the fweet ELEANOR, took her flight alfo. Hardly to complete eighteen years, is young: though half who are born are dead by fifteen years, fo many drop in infancy and childhood. (a)

We cannot fay this young woman lived not half her days; for fhe filled up the time that heaven had appointed for her. Her courfe of virtue was early run, and the great arbiter of life and death was pleafed to call her to reft!

Travellers feldom complain that they come too foon at their journey's end; and this young woman who died well, had furely lived long enough for herfelf; and as for the world in general, we muft leave it in the hands of God.

In the very bloffom of ELBANOR's life, her virtues were fragrant ! She was early at her duty, and as active as a bee; and the produce of her labour, as fweet as honey : the was no lefs a mittrefs at her needle, than of what belonged to the dairy; and industry was her pleafure and delight. In love for her

(a) Of 1000 born, 498 are dead by the age of 15.

her brothers and filters, nobody excelled her. She was affable to every one, and always ready to plead the caufe of pity, and of peace : no one could be a truer advocate for mifery and diffrefs. When the had nothing elfe to give, her tears flood in her eyes; but the comforted herfelf by thinking that there is no affliction for which religion has not provided a remedy. She fpoke of those whom the could not praife, with a tendernefs that expressed her univerfal benevolence. She went to church conftantly every fabbath-day, and read the Bible and Teftament, with fuch attention, as to understand what was neceffary to her happinefs in both worlds. At her leifure flie read other good books; and as carefully avoided those dangerous stories which corrupt the heart, and pollute the fancy. Guarded against the extremes of melancholy and careleffnefs, the poffeffed her foul in that happy chearfulnefs and composure, which are the ordinary companions of innocence, and the beft inftructors how to die. In the gifts of nature the was no lefs happy ; be-ing in temper fweet, in manners gentle, in converfation pleafing, and in voice melodious. Humility and the love of truth prevented her being given to affectation, for the had too much fenfe to be proud. With her fweetnefs of difpolition, the had a large portion of courage, which the wifely thought neceffary to the conduct of life; well knowing, that nothing can embitter life fo much as fear; nor any thing thing be more fantafile than falfe delicacy, as if women were not to be taught to die. She was fenfible that nothing can conquer this unmanly paffion, which is apt to fhow itfelf in fuch various forms, but religion, and the exercise of reason. With what glorious ftrength of mind, and refignation, did fhe fpeak of her own death; flowing forth her confidence in the mercy of God, declared by Chrift! The fame fentiments, and tranquillity of fpirit, which rendered her life fo amiable, attended her expiring breath. Thou knoweft the manner of her death was truly defirable, and her life a glorious object of initation.

(57)

Doft thou weep, my dear MARY, at this detail? Soft forrows rather heal than wound the fpirit; and there can be no bitternefs in thy grief." Thy tears befpeak thy tendernefs; but there are many reasons why thou fliouldit wipe them, and be comforted. She hath happily efcaped the dangers with which this life abounds. Calm and ferene, fhe-, poffeffed the most peaceful purity and unmixed hope, and exchanged this world for one much better. Is not this a plentiful fource of confolation? to think of being out of the reach of affliction; and what is more, beyond the poffibility of offending God! Thou, my child, knowell not the dangerous finiles of a treacherous world. . Comfort thyfelf! " Tear's will not water the lovely 'plant,' to 66 make

" make it grow again. Sigbs will not give her new " breath : nor canft thou furnish her with life and " fpirits by the wafte of thine own." Complain not of the fhortness of thy joy, nor let thy loss in her turn to thy difadvantage. Be thankful to thy maker that thou enjoyedft it fo long, and in thy forrow forget not to pray, " Thy will, O God, be done !" " To her, virtue was gray hairs, and an " unfpotted life, old age." Let the remembrance of her good qualities live in thine heart; and in proportion to thy-love for her, let her ftill be thy friend and monitor. Think of her happinefs; and in that reflection, be happy thyfelf. Wipe thy tears; and whilft thou offercit up thy pious lamentation. let this inftance of her well fpent life teach thee what is the defign of God in giving breath to mortals: and rather mourn for those who are living in fin, than for thy departed friend. It is a great unhappinefs to deceive ourfelves as to the probable distance of our death.

Two of my acquaintance, lately dead, were both far gone in their difeafe, and deemed incurable: each thought the other would die very foon, and openly declared his opinion; but neither feemed to imagine his own death near. Wife men correct their own faults by obferving wherein others are defective: but with us, all things go by fashion; and it is not the custom of our country to speak of the approach of death, or the state of the mind, not fuch confuled thoughts on the fubject. Instead of giving the most affistance that is practicable to those who need it, we give the least that can be imagined, whether it be wanted or not.

Were people of ability to talk the language of reafon and religion upon these awful occasions, it would probably rouze the spirits of many a sick perfon, and make the approach of death less dreadful.

If near relations were to endeavour by reading; prayer, or difcourfe, to infpire the dying perfon with courage to bear pain and death, the living would learn the better bow to die. The approach of death. like other dangers, is apt to terrify the fearfule Now this being the laft fcene, it feems ftrange that the dearest friends should be quite passive, and do nothing towards brightening the hopes of a blifsful immortality. We suppose that it will answer no good purpose to speak of death to one on a fick bed, unlefs the patient is a most abandoned, wicked perfon; and yet to fuch it may be of the leaft ufe, of which I told thee fome inftances. Our indifference in this inftance is ftampt with fuch a mark of fashionable authority, that any conduct. contrary to it, would be suspected of enthusiasm or hypocrify.-

H 2.

As a proof of this, how feldom are the miniflets of God's word required to attend; though good men, on fuch occafions, appear as angels to comfert. This is ftrange, MARY, but I fear it is too true; and this, amongst other things, makes the folly more apparent, in those who trust they shall repent, though they know not suber, nor subere, nor how. They are fure they shall die fometime or other, and they observe that people usually die in beds, and conclude they shall have a chance of a death-bed repentance. O MARY, do thou live prepared for death, nor in a concern of such vast moment trust to thou knowest not what.

Remember, if thou putteft off till to-morrow that which thou couldft do to-day, thou wilt not only be guilty of prefumption, but it is highly probable thou wilt never do it. I will tell thee, MARY, why I think fo. To-morrow, and to-morrow, creep on, in a flealing pace, to the end of our days. To-morrow can never be to-day. We never can be fure of thinking to-morrow, as we do to-day; but of this we are fure, that the lamp of life burns out, though behind the curtain; and when the oil is fpent, darknefs muft follow.

The general confideration of death flows the folly of immoderate grief, as well as exceflive joy, for any thing that befalls us. It likewife flows the madnefs of the daring fumer, who mocks at the fear fear of God. His laft day draws near, when he will ftand trembling with terror before his tremendous judge. The approaching day of the good is alfo coming on, in the fame pace; but this will be to them a day of triumph, beyond the power of language to deferibe. "The forrows of the poor and "the defpifed will then fly away like the fhades-" of night at the approach of the fun." That fuch glory, O my daughter, may be thine, fhall be my conftant prayer.!

DISCOURSE X.

I DARE fay, MARY, thou haft thought ferioufly of the fubject of our yefterday's convertation. I hope it will live in thy memory, as long as it fhall, pleafe Heaven to give thee breath. Thou feeft how fincerely I with to promote thy well-being beyond' the grave: I would gladly do the fame to all the children of men, and thus partake of all the good' they may arrive at the pofferfion of in that country where all diffinctions ceafe but those of virtue.

I told thee thy chance of life for fifteen years, and my own for five; yet haft thou not often heard; people fay, when they approach to fixty; " Threefore years! that is no age!" They know perhapsthat in a thoufand born, a few remain alive at fourfore, (a) and yet the chance is, that half the people of 60 will be dead before 70. (b)

Alas,

(a) Of 72 perfons (the remainder of 1000 born) being 70 years of age, by the courfe of mortality 55, of them die within ten years; and confequently only 27 of the 1000 remain alive at the age of 80.

(b) Of 135 (the remainder of 1000 born) being 60 years of age, before ten years are expired 63 of them die, which is not far fhort of the half part to die before any one reaches to 70 years.

Alas, poor ten years, to firut in about the world!' And do they confider that thefe ten years, are but broken fragments of time, divided out amongft the number of candidates of life; fome have only one or two, and others cight or nine; and, one with another, they hardly obtain above five or fix years of the ten? Too many are fo unwilling to die, asfeeretly to envy ignorance or poverty, or even pain, where they think there is a profpect of length of days.

Were it duly attended to, nothing could exalt: us fo much as the confideration of a life to come : nothing is fo noble, extensive, and delightful, in: contemplation. All the glory of this world is as nothing to it. And indeed mortality appears for continually at our doors and windows, in ourchambers, and fields, that one would imagine wethould fly to the promifes of the gofpel as to our only relief, and as the only effectual prefervative. against the fear of death. But when we do not learn fuch leffons in our youth, we hardly come to. a right understanding of them; yet learn them wemuft at fome time or other, or retire quite unprepared to give up our account. If thou, MARY, wilt try the experiment, and make the next life the first. object of thy thoughts, take my word for it, thou, wilt, as thou advanceft, enjoy a glorious and delightful entertainment, which common mortals are-- Arangers.

ftrangers to. Indeed, I am afraid it is a fecret to a great part of mankind, though evidently the leading principle of the gofpel, and most intimately connected with our progress in holinefs. It is impossible to live, and not to die; and God hath made it impossible to die, without being happy or miserable after death.

We hear of each others' bodily complaints, " till we grow fick of the fubject;" but when didft thou hear any one talk properly of the joys he hoped for after death? How might we animate each other in this glorious purfuit, if our practice kept pace with our christian.profession !

"The wife look forward into futurity, and con-"fider what will be their condition millions of "ages hence, as well as what it is at prefent." And how can the true fpirit of chriftianity be revived, unlefs we meditate on the happy immortality which it promifes ?

Such being the defects in the practice and intercourfe of nominal christians, I know not what better advice I can give, thee, than to converse with thine own heart; to read, to think, to regulate thy thoughts, and observe the tendency of thy actions, calling thyfelf always to a proper account.

The lefs thou examinest thine beart, the more deceitful it will become, and the more it will flatter thee. Yet when thou dost examine it, be not dif, keartened. heartened at thine own imperfections. Every thing may be reformed by grace, and improved by care. Compassion is due to ourfelves: a feverity of falfchaflifement, beyond the bounds which reafon warrants and our truft in God demands, leads to melancholy or defpair. Aufterities, beyond certain bounds, have not the marks of true religion. We may be very wife, and yet in good fpirits, cheerful, and good-humoured; nay, piety itfelf implies an agreeable and pleafing quality. In many cafes we ought to remember our own faults, and forget those of others; yet, though confcious of our imperfections, we fhould take pains to confider ourfelves in that light wherein it is most probable we shall benefit; drawing this conclusion, that distrust of God is of all evils the greatest except defpair.

Endeavour, MARY, to conquer the world and the vanities thereof, or thefe will conquer thee. It is neceffary to contend for victory in humble confidence, that when thou haft done thy endeavour, though thine own merit cannot fave thee, yet wilt thou be accepted. " Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

Remember the counfel and admonition of our great Lord and Mafter when he bid his difciples, and confequently all his followers through all generations, to be of good cheer, for that be had overcome the world. If thou wilt walk in his fteps, thou thou wilt overcome it too, as far as will be required of thee. Be affured that whenever the thoughts of immortality are habitually rejected, thou art either living in a finful habit, in defiance of heaven, or thou doft not believe the promifes of Chrift, fo as to look forward towards them with a grateful, a joyful, and a courageous heart.

This great doctrine of the refurrection, is properly an object of faitb; but now that it is revealed to us, nothing is more agreeable to reafon, and the works of God give evidence to it. I know that although the corn which I fow corrupts, and lies dead in the earth, it brings forth its feed in due feafon. Thefe are the works of God, and we fee the effects with our eyes, but how they are performed we know not. Thou feeft them, and believeft in them; is it not highly reafonable to believe in his word alfo ? We have the most undoubted evidence that Chrift arofe from the dead, and that he raifed the dead. The miracles he did, gave proof of thewill of the Almighty, as well as of his power; and we have the express promife of Christ (if we arereally his difciples) that where he is, there we fhallbe alfo. St. John xiv. 3.

. If thou therefore meaneft to deferve the glorious name of a cbriflian, be zealous for thy mafter's honour. Examine into the circumftances of his life with care and attention, and flow thy love for him him by thy obedience to his precepts: all other inflructions compared to them are light in the balance. Thou wilt find it in the New Teftament, most clearly marked out (a). Keep thine eye on this model in every action of thy life; it will give thee more comfort and joy in the end, than volumes of other reading, or all the pleafures the earth can furnifh.

And what hath been the fate even of whole nations, with regard to this world? Where are the antient people, the Jews, who made fo great afigure in their time, as the facred hiftory informs us? What variety of national punifhments did their fins occafion, till they were cut off from the earth, as a people ! Where are the mighty empires of

DISCOURSE XI.

In contemplating the life of our Saviour, and the rules of behaviour which he hath taught, thou wilt find fuch hope and joy fpring up in thy breaft, as will banish all falfe apprehensions. Whatever thy lot may be, this will prevent thy falling into the blindnefs of fuperflition, the frenzy of entbufiafm, or the deplorable fighs of melancholy. There are many who pretend to genuine christianity, and yet have foisted into their religion a vast variety of follies and iniquities. It is neceffary on this occafion to warn thee against them.

The Papifls have carried their fuperfittion to the height of idelatry; infomuch that they even pray to deccaled mortals, and worfhip images made of wood and flone, and pray to faints of their own making. I have heard my mafter fay that he has feen, in popifh countries, images carried about the fireets, to which the people fell down upon their knees and prayed, aferibing to them the power of working miracles. To fuch heights of dotage and childifhnefs may mankind be brought, when they have once deviated from the true worfhip of the one fupreme and invifible God ! Canft thou think there are any in this land fo blind as to entertain this this abfurd faith? There are fome to foolifh, even at this time, when Papifts themfelves, in feveral popifh countries, are every day difeovering their errors and delufions. To fuch a height may falfe fear and fantaftic hope be carried, as to make people believe that fuch a male or female faint can do fuch and fuch things for them; or if they make application, with liberal prefents, at the church or chapel dedicated to fuch a faint, he will avert evils, and give them fuccefs. Thefe people alfo make yows and promifes, as if Gott were to be bribed by their gifts and deeds of oftentatious charity.

Learn from hence what evils mankind are exposed to; and how happy we are, in being born in a land where the feriptures are in every one's hand, remembering that the greater our opportunities, the greater will be our condemnation if we do not avail ourfelves of them, and that it will be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the judgment, than for us 1 See St. Luke x. 14.

Perhaps thou art not aware that even right difpofitions, if carried beyond their due bounds, and not regulated by reafon, may degenerate into vices. And thus it comes, that the fear of God, if unworthy notions are entertained of him, may produce fuperfitition. In fome countries this weaknefs has been confidered as a crime; but furely, MARY, it is rather an object of our compafilon than of our anger.

afiger. Some, to this day, make every thing to be ominous, and in their foolifh opinion, the moft fimple accidents threaten great evils : witnefs the croaking of a raven, or the ticking of a fpider or other infect vulgarly called a death-watch. Thou haft feen fome of our good' neighbours much difturbed at the overfetting a falt on the table, and by laying knives acrofs; and, if there happen to be just thirteen in number in a company, they make it a reafon for believing one of them will die within the course of the year; and not knowing who it will be, they all imagine what they pleafe, and take pains to torment themfelves. There are a thousand foolifh whims, the true growth of fuperstition.' It is hard to fay whether there be most folly, or madnefs in this; but it certainly argues a distrust of the wildom and goodnels of God: for how can we fuppofe that the all-wife ruler of the world will difcover any of his defigns to men, by means fo trifling and infignificant; or torment them by doubts and anxieties, founded on fuch trivial circumftances? Superfition prepares the mind to receive any imprefions from artful perfons fuch as pretend to tell fortunes, and others yet more wicked, who deluding by falfe doctrines, and reprefenting falfehood as truth and vice as virtue, lead the unwary into great mifchief, and fometimes into destruction. And thus superstition roots up the foundations of religion; and in no inflance has it been productive of more tragical effects than in the belief of witchcraft. Be affured, MARY, that witches are nothing but the children of a fick brain. To imagine that the Lord of nature fhould make a poor old woman an inftrument " to untie the winds, to fwallow up fhips in the waves, to blight the bladed corn, and to afflict a favourite child with fits or infanity," merely becaufe fhe has been refufed a trifle when begging at the door, is altogether weak and abfurd.

Our poor old neighbour, Dame Tempeft, has been called a witch, merely becaufe the variety of her wretchednefs has made her a miferable object. Her eyes are covered with a dreadful falt and burn- , ing rheum; fhe trembles in fpeech; her hearing much impaired ; her garb is the emblem of poverty, composed of various colours, being patches with which industry and mifery have loaded it. And yet this poor creature has feen better days; but, outliving all her children and her friends, and condemned to a folitary cottage, fhe hath appeared as an outcast from the human race. She worked as long as fhe was able, but is now reduced to the miferable pittance of one fhilling a week from the parifh. Yet, in the midft of all this accumulated diftrefs, fhe poffeffes herfelf with patience and fortitude, looking forward to her diffolution with tranquillity and hope. When I vifit her, the fpeaks to me with freedom and good fenfe. You are as an angel fent I 3 from . ive.

from heaven, the fays, to fupport and comfort me. You think me miferable, but perhaps I am not fo much fo as I appear: the evils that I fuffer are fome of them the inevitable lot of humanity, and as my conficience bears me witnefs that in fimplicity and godly fincerity I have had my convertation in this world, I look forward with hope and confidence to brighter and happier fcenes; the approach of death has not any terrors for me, nay, it even feems defirable; and, fince it is the inevitable lot of all, is not this a privilege, think you, which it is worth the fuffering fomething to obtain?

Yet, MARY, with all this chriftianity about her, fo weak does credulity make mankind, that fhe is fulpected of being what they call a witch. When fear of evil is founded in a fenfe of guilt, repentance and amendment of life only can fubdue it, and convert it into the genuine fear of God. There is, however, but one way of fortifying thy foul againft fuperfittious fear, and that is, by endeavouring, with finglenefs of heart, to fecure to thyfelf the friendfhip and protection of that Being who difpofes. of all events, paft, prefent, and to come; infomuch, that not a hair can fall from thy head but he knoweth it.

I inuft give thee another charge with regard to falfe notions of religion. I have heard people talk of enthufiafts, who have totally neglected their families, their own health, and the concerns of this world, inpposing this to be necessary to maintain an intercourfe with the next. What a ftrange abfurdity ! In popifh countries, numbers of both fexes live on the fpoils of the poor, and do nothing; but religion is fo far from fuppoling that we have not bodies to provide for, that there is hardly a leffon in it which does not teach fomething that regards the good of the body; and whoever neglects his family, or his own health, from a mistaken notion that he shall thereby more acceptably ferve God, will find that he is most grievously mistaken, for this is voluntarily to leave undone, and to unfit himfelf for, many of those duties which the Gospel requires. That there are enthufiafts of this untoward and ridiculous turn of mind. I do indeed believe, but I am perfuaded their number is very inconfiderable; and that thefe ought rather to be ranked as madmen than merely as enthufiafts. " I was hungry and ye gave me food ; I was naked and ye clothed me; I was fick and ye vifited me." Thefe, our great friend the Lord Jefus informs us, are works which he will regard as done to himfelf, if we do them to others who are in need. And though they must flow from a good spirit, they furely relate to the body.

Though I give thee this caution against a falfe notion which pious people fometimes fall into, I believe there are very few instances wherein industry is checked by piety, fo as to neglect a provision for the the body. The fobriety recommended by religion naturally tends to promote industry.

Another evil is melancholy : this fees misfortunes which never come, it anticipates those that will come, and it aggravates them when they are arrived : in effect, it runs to meet those calamities which we fhould rather fly from, or, by oppofing them with courage, conquer them. Superstition and melancholy are nearly related, and generally meet in the fame perfon. Upon the whole, we have all need of a faithful friend, or a fevere enemy, to admonifh and correct us, to perfuade us to our duty, or flow us our faults, fo as to make us afhamed of them. Happy are those who have such a friend ! In me, daughter, thou findeft one whofe fidelity thou mayeft depend on. These evils are to be guarded against with the more care, as they often take the name of virtues; and few who are infected by them are fenfible of their difease : being the effect of grofs folly or weaknefs of mind, the fame weakpefs renders the remedy hard to come at.

BUT worfe even than fuperfittion, enthufiafin, or melancholy, is the evil of uncharitablenefs in refpect to others who differ from ourfelves in opinion. Every people and language have notions of things peculiar to themfelves; but want of charity is the rock on which fo many millions have run, when they have fondly imagined themfelves to be in a fair courfe. The opinions of men are as different as their perfons; and the rafh manner in which we fometimes hear fentence pronounced on each other is no proof of wifdom, but, on the contrary, leads many into a labyrinth of uncharitable blindnefs.

I believe, my daughter, that all mankind who act agreeably to the dictates of their confeience, according to the lights afforded them, will be accepted by God: I believe this, becaufe I hope the fincerity of my own heart will be accepted by him, though I fhould err; and for the fame reafon that I would fhow mercy to others, I hope mercy will be flown to me.

God forbid that thou fhouldft look upon any one sa for to Heaven, merely becaufe he differs from thee in opinion; or be an enemy to any perfor who, as far as thou knoweft, is a friend to God. Do not thou, who art duft and afhes, pretend to decide the fate of others; nor let it affect the benevolence of thy mind, though others fhould prefumptuoufly fit in judgment upon thee. Adore thy Maker for his boundlefs goodnefs to all the children of men, whatever their fituation may be. If thou haft a deep fenfe of fuch goodnefs, it will naturally infpire thy mind with the tendereft charity, and the trueft benevolence,' towards all thy fellow-creatures, by whatever faith, mode of worfhip, or worldly interefts, they are diftinguifhed. This is the way, my dear MARY, to follow the great Lord and Teacher of the Chriftian world.

If thou thinkeft thy neighbour in an error which it is not in thy power to correct, it is enough if thou avoideft falling into the fame miftake. Still, I fay, be charitable, and leave him to that Being who is infinite in wifdom and mercy, and will moft affuredly adjuft all those differences which men fo often, and fo vainly, attempt to regulate.

I have many times obferved, my daughter, that, whether in religious or worldly concerns, " what men fay for themfelves, and what their adverfaries infer, or reprefent them as faying, are generally-two very different things; and those who will not be at the pains to confider diffinctly what each fide alledges ledges for itfelf, but will judge of either by the character or reprefentation made of it, will be for ever led into erroneous judgments concerning men and things, and continue unavoidably ignorant of the true flate of the matter in queftion." Experience has taught me this is fo much the cafe, that I am always flow of believing vulgar report.

As creatures of one common nature, endowed with fuch noble principles of action, and yet limited to fo fhort a time, one might fuppofe that nothing-but love and harmony would be found here on earth ; yet, unhappily, how conftantly do we obferve the contrary !

The gay world, whofe purfuits do not allow them time for much inquiry, are too apt to reproach the most ferious, be their faith and practice ever so pure, and frequently represent them as of some fect or other which they think to be a reproach. The most ignorant are always the most conceited, and unable to differ their own folly or the wildom of others.

If, therefore, it fhould fall to thy lot to be reproached for thy piety, as if, being pious, therefore thou muft have adopted fome falfe opinion, bear it patiently: rather think it the misfortune of others in judging ill, than thy own in being ill judged of; for moft of us have a greater propenfity to detect finall faults than to applaud great virg tues. In general, mankind live more according to fathion and opinion, which are very changeable, than according to the rules of wildom, which are fiteady and lafting; and as they live themfelves, fo they judge of others.

Upon the whole, I hope thou wilt treat all foolifh or unjuft reproach, with indifference; yet, as occafions offer, it may be not only warrantable, but neceffary, to defend thyfelf, by explaining thy opinion, and recommending peace and good will. Contradiction expressed in gross terms inflames the paffions, and paffionate disputes hardly ever enlighten the understanding, though they often extinguish the light of reason. "In heat of argument men are "commonly like those that are tied back to back, "close joined, and yet they cannot fee one another." My master used to mention an excellent rule to be observed in disputes: "That we should give fost "words and bard arguments, and not firive to vex, "but to convince, our opponents."

"There is as much wifdom in bearing with "other people's defects as in being fenfible of their "good qualities; and we fhould make the follies of "others a warning and inflruction to ourfelves." This is the way to preferve the mind in charity and peace, to correct ourfelves, and to reform the world.

Thou, my dear MARY, art yet comparatively in a flate of innocence. May'ft thou continue in it ! it! and let me die in peace! Remember that "it is always term-time in the court of conficience; and every one committing a trefpafs is a prifoner of juftice, as foon as it is done," whether it be known or not. What even thy conficience but whifpers thee to be wrong, there is fo firong a prefumption will be difpleafing to God, that thou fhould the forbear and fly from it, left it fling thee to death; for a wounded fpirit who can bear?

There is no remaining fixed to one point; thou wilt be always going on improving, or giving way and growing worfe. Time never flands flill: our nature fubjects us to change; and our change fhould always be for the better. Thus, though thou fhouldft remain low in condition, thou mayft rank high in virtue; but all the wealth in the world will not compenfate for a bad conference. Let a little time pafs, and all the diffunctions about which mankind make fuch a buffle, and often hazard their confeience and their fouls, drop into the grave. The earth will cover us all ere long, and fhe herfelf will be changed; and therefore it is abfurd to be exalted or dejected, beyond meafure, about any thing here below.

I will venture to affure thee, from the variety I have feen in my own life, that reality fearce ever equals imagination. Our earthly delights are feldom fo fweet in enjoyment as they are in expectation; but the pleafures of the mind are always fweet in K proportion proportion as they arife from a quiet conference, and a mind full of hope. To be fenfible that the conference is wounded is one part of its cure, provided we keep the fore open till it heals effectually; and not as those who fkin it over, or do any thing to divert the pain. " It fareth with men of an evil conference, when they must die, as it does with riotous fpendthrifts when they must pay their debts; they have declined coming to account, from a diftruft of their inability to pay, till the hand of justice overtakes them." Think, O my dear MARY, that divine justice comes with leaden feet, yet if we perfift in our offences, it will ftrike with iron hands. Hearen preferve thy foul unfpotted from the world!

DISCOURSE XIII.

IN common life, MARY, we effeem humility one of the most excellent of moral virtues. It makes uslove our fellow-creatures, and often attracts their affection ; but can excite no malice or envy. It has one peculiar advantage adapted to all circumftances, for it fets us above the world in the trueft and beft fenfe; for, " he that is little in his own eyes will not be troubled to be thought fo by others." The confequence of which is, freedom from temptations. to pride and envy; whilft it bids fair to fubdue anger, ambition, and all other turbulent paffions, which are fo apt to inflame and difturb the human breaft. Thus, what is most pleasing to God is at the fame time most productive of worldly happi-" Bleffed are the meek, for they fhall inherit nefs. the earth."

Thou halt promifed me in the most folenin manner to be humble; that is, to use thy endeavours to be fo. Our Saviour commands us to learn of him, for that he is meek and lowly; and if we follow his example, we shall find rest unto our fouls. Fronk whence we may eafily conclude, that we fhall not find any fuch reft if we are turbulent, ambitious, covetous, covetons, or difcontented. One fally of anger, one emotion of envy, or unchaîte defire, naturally begets another; and till we conquer ourfelves, we certainly shall not be at peace. The mind is the feat of empire in the little world within us, and if its fubjects mean to be at peace, they must be quiet.

If any temptation create an extraordinary tumult in thy breaft concerning what is right to be done, confult thy confcience, and humble thyfelf before thy God. In doing this we may poffibly feel fome fmart, but this is of the kind we are fentible of on the dreffing a wound by any falve which heals it. Humility hath amazing properties, and operates on the paffions like a charm. If against thy better judgment, thy inclination pulls thee with the cords of iniquity, fly to thy prayers for fuccour. Think of the effects of ingratitude: confider the terrors of an offended confcience: bring that to thine eyes immediately, which must furely happen: and startle at the bitter pangs of remorfe!

We often hear the fober part of mankind talk of the neceffity of warring against nature; but they mean this of the corruptions of our nature. To oppose the evil propensities to which we find ourfelves inclined, is the best proof of being friends to religion. If our passions rebel we must war against them, and reduce them to obedience and reason. By whatever name thou calless thy evil inclinations, it is thy duty (105) will be crowned with victory. We are affured that the power of conquering will be given us, if we feek. it with a fincere heart.

If thou wilt take my advice, read the New Teftament every day of thy life, though it should be but a verfe or two, in order to fupply thyfelf with fome good thought. Lend a patient ear to thefe oracles of God. Transcribe what thou readeft into thine. heart, and cherish it in thy boson.

If the circumftances of the life and death of Chrift, what he did and fuffered, and what he hath commanded and forbidden, were made the rule of life, we fhould feel our existence in a very different. manner, and our days would pass in greater peace .. Such leffons are necessary at all times ; but if we do. not learn and relift them whilft we are in youth,... how are we to form our tafte and model our lives aswe advance in years ? . If we dwell on the fenfe con-tained in the fcriptures, and confider them as the words of eternal life, we fhall not be at a lofs to find the road to a happy eternity. What years have L fquandered ! How often have I offended my reason! From experience I now am qualified to be thy infructor : O my daughter, attend to my words, and be wife! A cleanter life be virtuous. I hope all other good will follow; for, whilft thou art virtuous, thon never wilt be forfaken of God, or totally rejected by thy fellowcreatures. Thy want of riches is, in many refpects, freedom from temptation; fuch is the kindnefs of heaven in that which is withheld as well as in that which may be given. When we fee good men afflicted, which frequently happens to fome during the whole courfe of a long life, for what can this be but to exercise their faith, and advance them in their progrefs to perfection? There needs no extraordinary powers of understanding to reconcile fuch events.

Indeed, MARY, I am under no anxiety as to. what thy lot may be in this world, provided thy. life.

I learnt in my early days that even heathens concluded, from the diffress in which virtue is fometimes involved, and from the fplendour in which vice frequently triumphs, there must be a flate of. rewards and punifhments after death ; and accordingly my mafter told me that their ancient poets represented this state in very strong and fignificant terms. They had no clear lights to guide them; we have fuch lights. No man on earth has been in heaven or in hell to tell us what is paffing there; but the word of God gives us as much information in this matter as can poffibly be neceffary; for, if men believe it not, " neither would be they perfuaded though one fhould rife from the dead."-Could I, my dear MARY, " reprefent to thee the " different flates of good and bad men : could I " give

" give thee the profpect which the bleffed martyr ST. STEPHEN had, and fhow thee the bleffed " JESUS, at the right hand of God, furrounded " with angels, and spirits of just men made perfect "-could I open thine ears to hear the never-" ceafing hymns of praife which the bleffed above " fing to bim that was, and is, and is to come; and " to the lamb that was flain, but liveth for ever-" could I lead thee through the unbounded re-" gions of eternal day, and fhow the mutual and " unbounded joys of faints, who are at reft from " their labour, and live for ever in the prefence " of God! or could I change the fcene, and " unbar the iron gates of hell, and carry thee " through folid darkness, to the fire that never " goes out, and to the worm that never dies-" could I flow thee the apoftate angels fast bound " in chains, or the fouls of wicked men over-" whelmed with torment and defpair-could I open " thine ears to hear the deep itfelf groan with the " continual cries of milery, cries which can never " reach the throne of mercy, but return in fad " echoes, and add even to the very horrors of " hell"-could I do this, my daughter, I fhould roufe every faculty of thy foul, and arm thee with a triple shield to guard it against the dangers it is exposed to.

What I have been faying to thee is not visionary nor fanatical; they are the words of a great divine vine, (a) drawn from the fcriptures, and thou mayft plainly perceive in them the most nervous fense and manly piety, devoid of all poetical fiction, and free from the bitter fighs of melancholy, the false fears of superstition, or the irregular warmth of enthufias.

Make it thine own by recollection, and live as if thou hadft the glories of heaven in thy view. Thus, by the mercies of God, thou wilt ere long arrive in those blifsful regions which the learned and judicious prelate has to beautifully defcribed, there to fing hallelujahs before the throne of the Almighty, in the transfeendent glory of the one Supreme, and partake of that happines which furpasses all description, and will endure for ever and ever.

DISCOURSE XIV.

I AM afraid, MARY, thou haft experienced for much tendernefs under my humble roof, thou wilt think thy treatment the harfher any where elfe; but fear not : rather fuspect that an excess of kindnels may make thee provid, or lead thee into fome other inare, than be difcomforted, if fome things thould be difpleafing to thee. Bleffed are those who do not raife their expectations above measure; for they fhall not be difappointed. Nothing is more natural to youth than impatience. Their inexperience flatters them into a belief that every thing ought to be according to their will. They forget the proverb, that " the furthest way about is the nearest way home ;" and are often in fo great a hurry as to defeat their own purpose. They do not accommodate their minds to others as fubordination requires, and yet they flatter themfelves that others will fubmit to them.

It is faid that " hafty men never want woe;" and it is most true, that impatience often involves them in quarrels and great difficulties. I charge thee, MARY, to love patience. Carry these truths flored in thy mind. " A patient man will bear for a time, and afterward joy shall spring up unto him. He He will hide his words for a time; and the lips of many fhall declare his wifdom. The finner fhall not efcape with his fpoils; and the patience of the godly fhall not be in vain." Thefe, my daughter, are the fentiments given in this cafe, by the wifeft man, except one, that ever lived upon the earth; and the experience of above two thousand years, has confirmed the matter.

The government of the tongue alfo feems to be a branch of patience, for unfeemly words are a great proof of the want of it. We have a common faying (of those who speak foolishly) " that a fool's bolt is foon thot." We have two ears, and but one tongue, as if providence meant that we flould hear much, and speak little. To use good words is an eafy obligation; but not to fpeak ill, requires only our filence, which cofts nothing. When thou hearest evil reports, repeat them not, thou wilt then be fure of doing no harm to thyfelf, nor injustice to thy neighbour : and this will afford thee more true fatisfaction, than any pleafure thou canft enjoy in telling a tale, the very repetition of which carries with it fome degree of evil. If there is no ufe in telling it, but merely for conversation, there is fome danger; and therefore let every one talk of it, hefore thou openeft thy mouth; and then do it with tendernels and forrow, rather than feverity and fatisfaction. If there is jby in heaven over a finner that repenteth, there must be forrow in heaven, over over every one that offends : and fhall angels weep, and finful man make a play-game of human mifery?-O my daughter, let not my leftons of charity and compaffion be given in vain. The day will come, when thou wilt think them of great value; and how vafily fhall I gain by this cultivation of thy heart, as well as my own, when I muft leave my fields to another hufbandman ?

Believe me, there is nothing fo dangerous, or fo contemptible, as a fatirical vein, and an overbearing manner of treating friends or foes. "He that maketh others afraid of his wit, had need be afraid of their memory." To defpife those with whom we commonly converse, or turn them into ridicule is fo ungenerous, I may fay fo treacherous, that it is shocking to humanity. The best dispofitions have many blemiss; and why should we speak of them to no good end? The artful way of mentioning fome flight merits to gain credit for candour, and then come out with a but, and heavy accusations is really abominable ! Always think before thou speakest.

In order to live peaceably, "never confirme that in earneft which may be confidered as fpoken in jeft, and be careful not to fay that in jeft which may be confirmed in earneft." It is a proverb, that "many a true word has been fpoken in jeft :" But whether it be jeft or earneft, people conceited of their wit, ufually fay what they think is bright and fhining, thining, let it coft them or their neighbour ever fo dear. There is a time when nothing, a time when fomething, but no time when all things are to be fpoken. Life and death are in the power of the tongue. Therefore take heed; my daughter, of whom, and to whom, thou fpeakeft.

The fondnefs which most people have of hearing themfelves speak, and of entertaining each other, often prompts them to supply the defects of memory by invention; I do not mean premeditated falsehood, but that in a flow of spirits they make their ftory good at all events. Most people who attempt to tell stories, are apt to tell them too often, especially as they grow old; "a tale out of feason, is as music in mourning;" and many a good story ill told, appears a bad one.

Above all, let me caution thee never to clofe thine eyes in fleep without recollecting whether thou haft not faid fomething wicked or foolifb, too mucb, or perchance too little in the day paft. Repent with fhame and forrow. There are fome fo unguarded and liberal of fpeech, and indulge their refentments fo much, that their whole life becomes a fcene of folly, or guilt; and fome who are fo callous, they know not when they offend.

Nothing creates variance fo much as evil tongues; and thy fex and youth make it more particularly incumbent on thee, not to indulge thyfelf in much talking; it cannot be reconciled to modefly; and

it

it opens fuch a field for familiarity, particularly among fervants, as is apt to breed hatred and contempt, or love out of feafon. Thou mayft obferve, that people of no education are fo much the lefs referved in the decency and modefly of their difcourfe.

Confider alfo thy particular fituation as a fervant. The fuperior station of thy mistrefs will naturally lead her to expect a degree of homage from thee : and that thou fhouldft not fpeak but when thou art fpoken to, and then be as ready as thou canft with thy answer. If her regard for thee should incline her fometimes to fpeak familiarly, never forget the is thy miftrefs. If the thould occasionally confider - thee as her humble friend and companion, thy tafk will become the more difficult. If thou fpeak boldly, it may be confidered as impertinence; and if thou flatter her, as is the cuftom of female fervants in fuch circumftances, flie being a woman of understanding, will look upon thee with contempt. In common life, we, who from birth and education have no view beyond fervitude, are apt to grow ufelefs, if not impertinent, if we meet much indulgence.

If thy miftrefs fhould demand thy opinion of a matter thou doft not underfland, to excufe thyfelf as being ignorant is fufficient; but if thou art acquainted with it, relate the facts rather than give thy opinion of them, and leave her to form a judgment, declaring, in fubmiffive terms, how much more able fhe is to judge than thyfelf. This thou may'l do without the leaft violation of truth; for, in all human probability, it will be the cafe; but remember to express thyfelf in as few, not in as many, words as poffible. I have faid the more on this fubject, not only with a view to teach thee how to behave in general, but as happiness in fervice depends fo much on the government of the tongue.

DISCOURSE

DISCOURSE XV.

FROM the government of the tongue, confider next, MARY, the importance of trutb. I have heard my mafter fay, that the Egyptians of old were ufed to wear a golden chain, befet with precious flones, which they filled trutb, intimating that to be the most illustrious ornament.

The facred writings tell us that God is truth; and therefore, to pervert the use of our speech, which so. remarkably diffinguishes us from the beafts that perifh, must be a high offence to him. " Truth is always confiftent with itfelf, and needs nothing to help it out; it is always at hand, and fits upon our lips, and is ready to drop out before we are aware: whereas a lie is troublefonie, and fets a man's invention on the rack; and one trick needs a great many more to make it good." Servants are but too jufily accufed of being guilty of this vice, yet unhappily it is not wholly confined to them. Alas ! my dear MARY, when I attended at table, I once heard a great lie from the lips of a fine lady; every one ftared as if they had been frightened, but nobody reproved her.

Amongs the first christians, they counted it a most impious thing even to diffemble the truth; and, L_2 when when under perfecution, feorned even life itfelf rather than preferve it on fuch bafe terms. This was not enthuliafm, but fober fenfe and reafon: they were followers of him " in whofe lips was no guile."

It may be thy fortune to live among people who make no foruple, occasionally, to tell each other in plain words that they lie. This has a harsh found, and a fevere meaning. There are many untruths advanced wantonly, or by mistake; in fuch cases, do thou reply in decent terms, as, I think you are misinformed, or, I believe you are mistaken: those who have any breeding often add, you will pardom me, or, you will excuse me.

There are alfo-many lies of vanity, which are deecitful, though not intended to injure. People who are too wife to believe what is faid look ferious on fuch occafions, and make no reply. It feems to be a duty of friendship, as well as humanity and religion, among intimates, to admonish in private for fuch lies; though I am forry to tell thee, MARY, that mankind feldom have for much courage on the one fide to give, or humility on the other to take, notice in a friendly way of any fort of lies.

Whatever the cafe may be, to give the lie is a great fault, though thou fhould the much provoked; but it is a greater to tell one. Women fhould be at least as careful of their honour, in this inflance, as menufually are. Amongst the gentry, there are fome

men

men who will tell a lie without any hefitation; but if they are reproached by another, in order to fupport a good name, they demand his blood. Thus many have fought, under a notion of preferving their bonour, who had no good name, and confequently hazarded their lives for nothing !—I tell thee this, that thon may flⁱknow what is paffing in the world, and civilize thy minners, as all people ought to do.

· My mafter used to fay, there are fome nations whom we affect to despife for their ignorance and poverty, more civilized than ourfelves, and among whom there is lefs danger of fuffering violence. There is a civility even in a carman which naturally delights, and makes one wifh to be his friend; as; when he is brutal, we long to fee him chaftifed. Remember that people who are really honeft at heart are clear in their difcourfe, and keep close to truth. " Lying is the vice of a villain, a coward, and a flave. If thou art difcovered, thou become fb for ever fulpected. All that thou canft. get by lying or diffembling is, that thou wilt not be believed when thou fpeakeft truth." If thou tell a lie, thou wilt be tempted to support one fallehood by another; and a continued aggravation of guilt, or a bitter repentance, must follow. The at the liter of the de

I am forry to tell thee, MARY, that there are many fervants now-a-days who feruple not to tell lies, and others who equivocate and evade the truth.-They mean to support a certain character, by appearing .

ing to have more virtue than they can make a just claim to, and yet degrade themfelves by the infamous practice of lying.

Those who have been brought up in the fear of God, and understand the vileness of a lie, must be extremely diffreffed when they are taken by furprife; but to intend by fuch means to deceive is flocking !-Lying is a vice which walks abroad with gigantic ftrides. It prevails much among those who are in a flate of fervitude, as if they were ignorant that a lie is a crime of the blackeft dye. SOLOMON favs, " a thief is better than a man accustomed to lie, but they both shall inherit destruction ;" and, speaking in his own perfon, fays, " I have bated many things, but nothing like a falle man, for the Lord will hate him." Deftroy truth among men, and they will become to each other worfe than beafts; for these, I believe, practice no deceit upon their own kind. The wife man fays, "The lip of truth shall be established for ever; but a lying tongue is but for a moment."

All wife people hold their tongues when it is not proper to fpeak; but never lie, deceive, or equivocate; for this is practifing in the works of the devil, who is the father of lies.

My dear MARY, I hope thou wilt convince thy miftrefs, and every body elfe, that thou haft a foul fuperior to falfehood, and haft learnt to dare to tell the truth to those who have a right to require it, though though thou fhouldft condemn thyfelf to the acuteft fuffering. It is thus thou mayft be fure of refpect, and perhaps of promotion : "Keep thy word, and deal faithfully, and thou fhalt always find the thing that is neceffary for thee." The wife man does not engage that dealing faithfully fhall make every one rich; this would be impoffible: but that it will provide every one with what is neceffary for them; which is all we can with any decency beg of the Almighty, or perhaps with fafety wifh for or defire.

My dear MARY, if I fhould live to hear thou haft told a lie,' it will be as a dagger to my heart. All the labours of my mind in thy fervice, and all the hours I have fpent in giving thee inftruction; though they will return into my own bolom, yet with regard to thee, they will be mixed with the bitternefs of forrow. O cherifh in thine heart the love of truth; I have told thee that God is truth, and therefore those that love truth love God, and will be beloved of him; and, however mean their condition on earth, they are the objects of his mercy, and will be made happy for ever and ever!

and and welling a mine date supported by at OUR laft conversation, MARY, was upon the fubject of iruth; I will now endeavour to point out to thee the hateful nature of pride. A very little experience will teach thee how fatal it is to the human breaft, and how contemptible it appears in the eyes of the beholders. What is it fuch wretched mortals as we are can be proud of? If we do well, it is but our duty. Obferve how the wretched little pifmire, man, ftruts about when he is proud! Behold what an extravagant opinion he has of his own merits, what an immoderate conceit of his own genius, and how low he holds others in effeem, who probably may be more estimable than himself! How untractable are the proud, how feldom they yield to reafon, and how often they involve themfelves and others in difficulties which might have been eafily: avoided !

It is amazing to confider how fuch things of duft as men can indulge pride! If thou feeleft this paffion work in thy breaft, defpife thyfelf in duft and afhes, and pity others when they are guilty.

- When

When I receive a favour, done with an air of pride and difdain, it lofes more than half its value; and my heart almost revolts against the expression of my gratitude, to those who deferve so little of my efteem. To be proud of knowledge is abfurd, feeing that the wisest know so little: and as to riches, do not the greatest among men stand in need of the meaness; and are not our labours at least as useful to them, as their wealth to us? Pride is apt to lurk in every human heart; confider therefore what is passing in thine own boson.

Pride, when it exalts us in our own effeem, and tempts us to defpife others, never fails to wound the peace of mortals, and frequently turns their brain. Thou haft read that it was the crime of fallen angels. The wife man fays, "the beginning of it is, when one departeth from God, and his heart is turned from his maker." Remember, MARY, that thou art a chriftian, a follower of the meekeft and greateft perfon that ever lived. Confider how the brightnefs of his humility darts forth rays which dazzle and confound the pride of man.

SOLOMON fays, " that vengeance, as a lion, fhall lie in wait for the proud, but humility and the fear of the Lord are riches, and honour, and life." Thou feeft that he confiders humility as infeparable from the fear of God, and productive of worldly bleffings. But he tells us, " the proud are hated of God, and as they plow iniquity and fow wickednefs, they shall reap the fame."

Proud people are generally the most ignorant of their own hearts; nor can we fee ourfelves whilst pride stands in our, light. How many in all stations has it brought to ruin !

I could relate a tale which would melt your heart: I remember a farmer's daughter in this neighbourhood who was fent to London, as you are now going. A place which was thought a very good one was provided for her; but fhe, like a filly proud girl, and impatient of controul, thought fhe needed neither admonition nor inftruction, and in a petulanthumour gave warning to her miftrefs. Unable to get fo good a place, fhe declined a worfe which fhe might have had, and was foon feized by the cold hand of poverty; and what was the confequence? —to relieve her wants fhe became a profitute.

She might have returned to her father ; but neither would her pride allow of this. He heard of her evil conduct; and wrote to her in terms that might have moved a heart of flint; at the fame time requesting of me to feek her out, and expoftulate with her. I thought myfelf fortunate in finding her, though in a brothel. After fome other questions, for I spoke in the spirit of humanity, I asked her if she believed in a future life, and in a state of rewards and punishments after death, and if if the thought the fin the lived in was not forbidden by the chriftian religion, under the penalty of everlafting damnation, if the died impenitent. She looked ftedfaftly at me for fome time, as if the was at a lofs what answer to make, and then faid: "You may tell my father, I do not mean to go on in an evil courfe." However the continued in it; and before the reached the age of twenty-two, died of a decay, the effect of the foul difeale.

In general, is it not enough to humble the proudeft heart, to confider what ficknefs, pain, age, or miffortune may reduce us to; and that a few years muft bring us all down to the duft? Of all human blindnefs and folly nothing can be more deplorable than pride: In the ricb, it is one of the moft mifchievous, among the poor, the moft contemptible of vices. Pride will choak all thy other virtues. Among the proud themfelves thou mayft obferve that they hate one another, and are the first that complain; for though a likenefs of manners in all other inftances generally begets love, in this it produces hatred.

Confult thine own welfare: think what the effects of pride ufually are;—mockery, derifion, and reproach. From the fame fountain flow unforgivenels, cruelty, and the contempt of others. O MARY, defpife not the meanent perfon on earth, nor fuffer pride to hurry thee into refertment of the the untoward behaviour of others. At first view, it feems to be difficult to return good for evil, but thou hast been taught, from thy youth up, that this is wisdom and virtue, and immortal glory. How many, through pride, show the fiercess referentment for mere triffes. Yet, thou will be told perhaps, that a portion of pride is necessary for a woman, and is the best prefervative of her chassity. But such advisers missake a referve of behaviour, which often proceeds from a principle of prudence, for that detessable vice. This referve thou wilt generally do well to practife, but do not confound so obvious a distinction, as many are apt to do.

Vanity and affectation are vices to which thy fex is in a particular manner addicted, it is neceffary therefore to give thee a precaution against them. Vanity is the folly of foolishness, and affectation the cryer that proclaims it. If thou mean to preferve thyfelf pure and untainted, dread vanity. When a woman grows vain of the charms of her perfon, or fine cloaths, or accomplishments, the exposes herfelf to ridicule, and as it were tempts vice; for who expects resistance from those who have fo little understanding ?

One would not imagine, MARY, that in our rank of life thefe vices fhould ever be feen; but there are fools of all forts, and I have feen young women in villages, as well as heard of them in courts, whom the looking-glafs, or the flattery of men, have perverted even to turn their brains; and I believe the confequences are generally the moft fatal in the lower flate of life.

men,

They are more dangeroufly ill, MARY, who are drunk with vanity, than those who are intoxicated with wine. In the last case, a short time sobers them again; but in the former, they fometimes become incorrigible; and you may be assured, that every woman is defective in understanding in the fame degree that she abounds in vanity.

Take care, my daughter, how thou trufteft to flatterers. The greater the commendation is, be the more on thy guard, and fall not a facrifice to a few empty words, though there fhould be fome truth in them. Believe not all the good that is fpoken of thee, whether it be faid to thy face or not.

"The only advantage of flattery, regarding virtue or underflanding, is, that by hearing what we are not, we may be influcted in what we ought to be:" I have heard my mafter obferve, that it is a very old faying, "that flatterers never lift any one up, but as the eagle does the tortoife, to get fomething by his fall; and that crows devour only the dead, but flatterers the living."

On the other hand, it is most true, " that in the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh," and fome kind and tender words will fall from honess tongues, which, if not all strictly true, do not the less proceed from the heart. However, flut thine ears to flattery, from whatever quarter it may come.

As to us men, we are lavish in the praifes of women whose perforal charms make impressions on us; but be cautious how thou listeness, less thou shoulds fall thyself, where thou apprehendess no danger.

DISCOURSE XVII.

CONSIDER further, that pride and vanity lead to envy, and envy is apt to excite refertments even of virtue itfelf. Weak and wicked minds have often committed horrid crimes from mere envy: The envious poifon themfelves with the virtues of others. SOLOMON fays, " the envious man hath a wicked eye, he turneth away his face and defpifeth men."

The fureft fign of a generous and good difpofition, is to be without envy; but the bafe and ignoble are generally envious. In all the catalogue of vices, none feem to be more foolifhly wicked and abominable, than envy, except malice and revenge. To pretend to leffen what we will not imitate, or to wifh to humble those above us, becaufe they are above us, has fomething in it fo black, that I know not how to express the hatred which thou oughteft to have of it. Other paffions may claim a pretence at leaft to fome pleafure or fatisfaction; but what can envy furnifh, but pain and vexation, at that which is properly the fubject of joy?

Malice is nearly related to envy, and in its effects yet more abominable: what is faid of one, may without much injuffice be imputed to the M 2 other. other. And then mayil conflantly observe that . these who are most inclined to do any injury, are for the fame reason most disposed to malice; or in other words, least willing to forgive. If then studies at any time for far turn thine eyes from heaven, as to feel the impressions of malice in thine heart, look into thine own bosom and tremble ! O my dear MARY, I can fay nothing stronger than that malice is fit only for the ministers of the prince of darkeefs

Envy and malice are the genuine offspring of Lucifer, but revenge is his favourite child, and this passion is most apt to arife in perfons of little minds. To includge this paffion is equally foolifb and devilifb. My dear MARY, learn to bear an injury, and confider an affront rather as injurious to the party who is guilty, than to thyfelf who art not guilty. If thy forbearance triumphs over the offence, thou art really the better, not the worfe for the affront; it certainly cofts more to revenge injuries, than to bear them. I know an inftance in which this p: ffion has been gratified; but it coft the party very dear. A girl of this neighbourhood taking offence, robbed a man of his bride, by telling a ftory which was not true, or very much difguifed. When the truth came out, it occafioned her lofing her own lover, who was too generous in his nature to bear the thoughts of an alliance with a woman fo dangerous with her tongue.

Thou

Thou knoweft that our divine religion commands us to be charitable and tender even to our enemies, and to do them good when they do us evil. "SOLOMON was a Jew, yet he fays, " He that "revengetb thall find vengeance from the Lord, and " he will furely keep bis fins in remembrance." What then will become of fuch a miferable being, if becaufe of his revenge his fins thall be bad in remembrance against him ? Can we recollect too often that he that hateth his neighbour cannot love his God? We are all likewife admonithed to be kind to others, tender hearted, forgiving, as God by Christ hath forgiven us.

Cunning is alfo a crime, and one that is imputed most to thy fex, and to the very worst part of it, who are often dupes to their own deceit. Thou mayst have heard of an artful woman, or in other words a cunning woman, who has the talent of deceiving, or taking the advantage of the ignorance or fimplicity of other people. Cunning is fometimes mistaken for wildom, but is as different in reality as light and darkness. Wildom is truth itself, but cunning is a lye artfully infinuated, and intended to deceive, supposing that if truth be difguised the purpose will be answered.

I must also warn thee of the danger of being tooforward in believing, whether the matter relates to thyfelf or others. Confider what is faid, and by whom it is faid; compare it with thy experience; M 3 examine examine how far thy belief may concern thy intereft; how it may hurt thy 'charity or affect thy perfon. Nothing will fooner induce thee to believe a man than when he commends thee: nothing ought to alarm thee fo much. Many a poor girl has become a facrifice to the ready credit which fhe gave to the high commendations of her perfonal charms. If we examine the nature of praife in general, the partiality of fome and the inability of others to judge, there is great danger of its being often beftowed in the wrong place. What a buffle have we heard made by the multitude, in praife perhaps of the vaineft or moft vicious perfon; whilft for want of virtue in themfelves, they have totally overlooked the moft virtuous characters L

DISCOURSE XVIII.

I MUST next warn thee, my daughter, against the danger of a too eager purfuit after pleafure. Think what fools those are who give themselves up to idle purfuits, which are fo very fhort in themfelves, and must be attended with bitter repentance, or endlefs torments !--- A boy, greatly finitten with the colours of a butterfly, purfued it from flower to flower with indefatigable pains. First he aimed to furprife it among the leaves of a rofe; then to cover it with his hat as it was feeding on a daify; now hoped to fecure it as it refted on a fprig of. myrtle; and then grew fure of his prize perceiving it loiter on a bed of violets. But the fickle fly continually changing one bloffom for another ftill eluded his attempts. At length observing it half buried in the cup of a tulip, he rufhed forward, and fnatching it with violence crushed it to pieces. The dying infect feeing the poor boy chagrined at his difappointment, addreffed him in the following manner : " Behold, now, the end of thy unprofitable folicitude ! and learn, for the benefit of thy future life, that all pleafure is but a painted butterfly; which, although it may ferve to amufe thee in the the purfuit, if embraced with too much ardour will perifh in the grafp."

No man is a matter of himfelf fo long as he is a flave to any thing elfe. Reafon grows ftronger by the exercise of it; whereas our love of vicious pleafures acquires ftrength by our indulgence of them. Thou perhaps mayft think it more in character for me to preach than for thee to practife. It is true, MARY, that I am in the decleminon of life, but for the faine reafon that I have travelled through it, I am the better able to inform thee, not only of the beft roads, but alfo how to guard against falling from the precipices, or finking into the quickfands with which it abounds.

Now, my dear MARY, obferve how the defire of pleafure creates fecret wifnes and expensive purfuits; how it involves its votaries in difficulties; how often thefe depart from their true interests, and at once facrifice their virtue and their happiness to an idol which at length falls down upon them and destroys them. Scenes of expense and jollity are frequently scenes of distress and misery; and company-keeping, as we term it, has hurried many a young woman into destruction.

I have heard fome of my neighbours comfort themfelves on their death-beds, that they never were company-keepers; the very thing itfelf, in their opinion, and as they faw others abufe the liberty of modelt conversation, implying a degree of guilt. On occafions of jollity people feldom know what they are about: They warm their blood with liquor, and by the means of mufic and noife they banifh reflection; and what can be the confequence?

Our great philosopher and friend fays, "The heart of the wife is in the house of mourning, but the heart of the fool is in the house of mirth;" teaching us that wife men rather go where they can do fome real good, and shudder not at beholding the most ferious parts of life; but that fools confider only how they shall be diverted; and you may obferve their aversion to every thing that requires thought.

I have already told thee the danger of anufement at improper times, and in doubtful company. All' the world knows that the fine lady and the country lafs equally delight in dancing and finging; the difference is only in the manner. Now let me advife thee to avoid both in company : finging is an amufement, and may be indulged in private, or at church in pfalmody; but idle fongs will be apt to enfnare fuch a girl as thou art, efpecially if thou fhouldft happen to excel thy companions. As to dancing, it is never practifed but in company, and, in our flation, dancing-company is, I think, generally bad company; I mean that dancing, in our flation, is never conducted with perfect decency, and free from danger to young women. I know not if dancing be worfe in town or country, but there is no neceffity to declare againft it in fuch terms as to quarrel with thy neighbours who refolve to dance at all hazards. I with that thou, my daughter, fhouldft be amufed by walking, or any thing innocent, when thou art permitted to amufe thyfelf, rather than by dancing. Thefe are the occafions, when fuch young women as thou art are lea/t on their guard, and when men of evil intentions are moft on the watch to carry their wicked defigns into execution. Thou wilt always find amufement and inftruction in reading, provided thou makeft choice of good and proper books; otherwife there is mifchief alfo in thefe.

This brings me to mention the great care thou fhould take in the choice of thy companions. Be affured that wherever the fpeech is impure, the mind is corrupted. If thou mean to preferve thy religion and humanity untainted, it is time to withdraw when the difcourfe is wicked, indecent, or flanderous. Confider thy company in a great meafure as good or bad, as they are tender or cruel towards their neighbour. Always endeavour to change the fubject when others are ill fpoken of. Soften the rigour of the fentence given by them, and avoid injuffice towards a good name, as thou would the decline a theft or robbery. If thou be fatiffied from circumfrances that the party abfent is injured, plead their caufe with a becoming warmth.

In

In acting thus thou wilt do as thou would the done by.

Endeavour to accommodate thyfelf to the capacity of those with whom thou converse file. If they be in a bigber condition than thyfelf, the more filence and attention will be neceffary: with those who are lower, the more affability will be proper. Never affect being to much above the meanest as to treat them with infolence: But whether fuperiors, equals, or inferiors, if they be viciously inclined, avoid them: do it with as much decency as thy circumstances will admit of; but fill I fay, avoid then. The very "batred of the vicious will do thee less harm than their conversation." Remember, MARY, that it is the fecond word that makes the quarrel.

In thy intercourfe with the world, " be not eafily exceptious, nor given to contradiction, for this occafions contention; nor be rudely familiar, for this breeds contempt. " If any thing be not fitting, do it not: If it be not true, fpeak it not." Our tempers are frequently more eafily difcovered in little circumftances than in great ones. True Chriftians keep their temper on all occafions without any unbecoming warmth. You remember when the difciples of our Saviour were in a flame of refentment against the Samaritans, he rebuked them by faying, "Ye know not what spirit ye are of." An obliging difposition will always engage the attention of thy fuperiors; and take heed, MARY, that as thou woulds think it cruel to be condemned as ill-natured, for being fometimes off thy guard, or out of humour, fo as to express a hasty peevishness, do not expect perfection in others.

This inftruction is more particularly neceffary in thy flation, for as fervants are more ready to make remarks on this fubject, than mafters imagine they do, themfelves flould likewife be the more attentive to their own conduct, not to offend.

DISCOURSE

DISCOURSE XIX.

AND now that 'I am going to give thee rules for thy general conduct in life, remember that generofity ceafes to be a virtue, when it entices us to do offices of kindness beyond our power. Our virtues, as expressed in action, must be fuited to our circumftances. The mind may retain a readinefs of difpofition to ferve others, and fo far be as fruitful as the rain which cometh down from the heavens; but where there is no water in the clouds, .none can fall upon the earth. Whatever is in thy power, let it flow from a free hand and an open heart. The humbleft actions fometimes carry with them a greatnefs of mind fuperior even to the bounties of kings, and we must be contented when it pleafes providence to reftrain us with regard to the means of relieving others, and think with gratitude of the relief we receive ourfelves, still maintaining the generofity of our minds.

The more prudent thou art, the more able thou wilt always be to affift any one who is in particular diffrefs. Every one has fome power; and as the widow's mite was confidered by the Son of God as a great charity, thy little contribution may be ufeful to the diffreffed, and acceptable in his fight who fees the heart. If it happen that thou haft nothing which thou can't fpare, God will accept the thoughts of the heart. A tear offered up to mifery, where only a tear can flow, will be pleafing to the tender Father of mankind, who in fuch cafes accepts the will for the deed. When you can do it with a probability of fuccefs, and with good manners, remember it is as effential a part of charity to warn people of danger to their fouls, as it is to preferve their bodies. Thefe are duties clearly deducible from the uniform conduct of our Saviour.

It is better to be of a generous mind, though of the number of those who stand in need of relief, than of a hard-hearted disposition, though in plenty. The fame charity which, among christians, makes men humble, just, and watchful to do all the good and avoid all the evil possible, makes them also courteous and obliging : and nothing can be more certain than that one may be very charitable without having any thing to give; and very uncharitable, and yet, as St. Paul fays, give one's body to be burnt.

Charity, as comprehending cbriftian love, is fo abfolutely commanded, and is truly fo much the bond of fociety, that the neglect of it can never be difpenfed with. And what can exceed the pleafure of feeing others made happy, except the making them fo by our own means? By taking a fhare in the miferies of others, we render wretchednefs the more more fupportable; whereas plenty amidit the frowns and contempt of the world, is but a fplendid kind of mifery. The Mifer is of all characters in the world, the most hated. There are various ways of being charitable, befides giving money, and yet even in that respect much may be done by a very moderate fortune, where felf-denial is used; and the heart is fincerely inclined.

Thou haft often heard me mention Mrs. Ann Saracen. She lives in a cottage of three pounds annual rent, but it is as neat and clean as any palace. When the dines at home, the feeds on the value of about threepence; the eats and drinks of any wholefome aliment that comes in her way, but with fuch moderation, the never hurts her health by excefs.

From long experience, fhe underftands the quality of many drugs, and the ufe of kitchen phyfic; difpenfing the former with great judgment and fuccefs. By the fuperiority of her underflanding, fhe is able to infiruct her poor neighbours, influencing them by reafon, and the books which the gives them to read. She vifits prifons, and converfes with condemned malefactors. She puts children to fchool, and employs them in needle-work, partly by making up old linen, which fhe begs of her rich acquaintance: This fhe again devotes to the ufe of the indigent, by affifting them with child-bed-linen; which is returned clean to her after it hath been ufed, and the fame ferves for the birth of many children. N 2 children. All this is performed within the bounds of forty pounds a year. Thus amidft the checks of a fcanty fortune, the acts like a gentlewoman and a chriftian; thining like a ftar, to guide the poor, the afflicted, and the weary, to reft and comfort. When you praife her for her good deeds, the contracts herfelf like the fentitive plant, conftantly referring whatever is excellent to God, who is the only true fountain of all excellence.

She fays moreover, " what do I that every chrif-" tian woman who is miftrefs of her time and for-" tune would not do? If I am fo fortunate as to " have the favour of my fuperiors, I think I lay them " under an obligation when I offer an opportunity " of their doing good. He that neglects fuch an " occafion defraudeth his own foul. If I plead "the caufe of poor creatures who dare not appear " to fpeak for themfelves, I am fo far an advocate " in the caufe of heaven, and act as a fleward to " the family of God. I must use the talents my " mafter has intrusted me with; and when I have "done, give the glory to that being who is graci-" oully pleafed to make me the inftrument of his "merey. In this view I think myfelf preferred to " a higher employment, than if I were the first lady " of the bed-chamber to the queen. If the fine world "be infatuated with fuch trifles as drefs and diver-"fion, and make thefe the bufinefs of their lives; " if the gay are carried on, as it were by a refiftlefs " ftream, 5

" fream, fwimming on the furface in a delightful " phrenzy, and carclefs of the gulph which may " fwallow them up; what can I do more than fend " up my petitions to the throne of grace that their " eyes may be opened to fee their danger, and re-" covering their firength, get on fhore in fafety, if " fo it fhall pleafe the Almighty to avert his judg-" ments? The world will be governed by appear-" ances : happy are thofe who difeern realities;" and the time is furely drawing nigh when attainments in holinefs will alone be of any avail, and when thofe who have " turned many to rightcoufnefs will " fhine as the ftars for ever and ever."

MARY, what doft thou think of this character; is it not charming? Yet, fuch fhould we all be, if we were practically chriftians! I often think, MARY, when I take my rounds amongft my fick and poor neighbours, whofe wants are greater than I can relieve; I often think that if they to whom providence has given affluence would but accuftom themfelves to be fpectators of the miferies of vaft numbers below them, they would furely facifice a little more to humanity and charity, and would not offer quite fo much incenfe to the luft of the eye, and the pride of life.

Thy miffrefs is a lady admirably inclined to offices of piety and humanity. Entreat her leave to inform her what thou knoweft to be true, in regard to mifery and diffrefs. She will judge of what fhe

fhe ought to do. She will not withhold her bread from the fatherlefs who are dying with hunger, nor behold thofe who are perifhing for want of cloathing, expire at her gates : She will not make gold her confidence : The land will not cry againft her, nor the furrows thereof complain; but fhe will have mercy on the poor. Forget not, O my daughter, that charity will endure when time itfelf fhall ceafe. O my daughter, the earth, and all that we fee of the objects around us, even the heavens which are the canopy of it, will pafs away; Faith will be fwallowed up in fight, and hope ceafe with enjoyment: but charity is fo divine and pure in its nature, that it will conflitute part of the joys of heaven.

DISCOURSE XX.

THE connection between thy miftrefs and thee is a folenin contract for mutual benefit; and it is neceflary each flould be informed, and truly underftand, what the other requires, that the difcharge of this obligation with candour and juffice may create mutual kindnefs with regard. In fome countries fervants are treated as flaves; but we are all free, and our treatment is fuited to our liberty. Some mafters have a propenfity to tyranny, and fome fervants are much inclined to infolence and difobedience; but this proves nothing more than that there are bad people in all conditions, and that the good ought to be the more careful and vigilant in the exertion of those focial virtues on which the general!

Thy first thought should be, not to put thy masteror mistrefs to an unnecessary expense; yet nothing can be a greater temptation to this than the very reafon that makes most against it, namely, the carelefsnefs or ignorance of a master or mistrefs, which render them subject to become a prey.

Let me charge thee to be firstly on thy guard to take no advantage, or do any thing unjustifiable, becaufe becaufe thou mayft, perhaps, be able to do it, and not be difcovered. Fraud in this cafe would be an aggravation of guilt, a cruelty added to injuffice, and treachery to infidelity.

There are fome families who know well their income and expence, and are yet hurried on by cuftom and habit to live in perpetual diffrefs for want of the means of fuch a fupply as is neceffary to put them on a level with those who are their most constant companions.

Little doft thou know of the anxiety which attends the condition, of many a mafter and miftrefs, to fupport their rank, in the maintenance of their fervants: thou wouldft not envy them, if thou couldft fee their hearts. As a faithful fervant, rejoice to fee thy miftrefs prudent, though thou, couldft benefit much by her being extravagant.

Thou would the aften if hed, MARY, if I were to relate to thee a quarter part of what I know, in relation to the devastation of people's fortunes, in keeping more fervants than they can afford, or by leaving things entirely to their management.

If thou should become an upper fervant, or act in any capacity of trust, be equally just and exact; nor, from a mistaken notion of charity, fuffer the poor to be fed from the table of thy mistrefs without her leave, which on thy part would be downright dishonesty. Look upon every penny of thy mistrefs's money to be facred; and touch not a furthing a farthing for thine own ufe, though thou fhouldft mean to replace it. Set down what thou receiveft immediately on the fpot; and commit to writing what thou art paying, even before the money is out of thy hand. Do not truft thy memory as fome do, left thou fhould lofe thy money, or charge at random.

In regard to honefty thou canft not be too ferupuloufly ftrict. William Stitch found in the pocket of Lord Noble's waiftcoat, which had been put into his hands to new button, a bank-note of a hundred pounds. William brought it home, and defired to fee my Lord; and, being admitted into his prefence, told him what he had found, and that he did not choofe to deliver it to any one but his lordfhip. This noble lord commended his honefty, and defired William to accept of five guineas. . " What, my lord," fays he, " take money for being honeft ! No; the fatisfaction of my own mind for doing my duty is a reward that abundantly repays me. God forbid that I fhould be ever tempted to withhold another man's right, or expect a reward for doing him juffice !"

Inquire of those who can teach thee the best and exactes in accounts. Method is of fuch importance in accounts, that it flands next in rank to the fairness and justness of them; and the more plain and easy these are to be read and underflood, the more wilt thou be recommended to greater greater truft, and acquit thyfelf with the more honour.

Carry this in thy mind, that as good masters and mistrefies generally make good servants, to good fervants not only preferve the tranquillity of families, but frequently are the means of faving them from ruin. My mafter once told me of a friend of his who was obliged by misfortunes to contract his expences. He had given credit to fome of his acquaintance, who violated the most facred ties of confidence between man and man, and left him in diftrefs. In this fituation, he was obliged in his old age to difcharge all his domeftics. Servants are generally acquainted with their mafters' circumftances. This gentleman made no fecret of his; he told them why he paid them off. One of them burft into tears upon the occasion, and spoke to him in these terms: "Sir, I have been your chambermaid now five-and-twenty years. I have always honoured and refpected you ; you have treated me with the greatest kindness of a master, a father, and a friend. I have faved fome fcores of pounds in your fervice, that I might neither die for want, nor depend upon the parish for my support; but I can never live in peace whilft I think that you are in any kind of diftrefs. To you, under the good care of providence, I owe my life; to you I am indebted for much good inftruction-for the fafety of my, foul. I beg you will accept of my purfe, and all all it contains; it is the bounty of heaven, and in heaven I truft. He that feedeth the ravens, and letteth not a fparrow fall unheeded to the ground, will not forfake me. I am yet able to go to fervice; fuffer me to attend your fortunes, and be your fervant ftill; perhaps you may not find one more faithful and affectionate !"—They called her Theodofia Hope. She drew tears from her old mafter. He was not too proud to weep at the generofity of his fervant, though he bore his misfortunes with fortitude, and found that refignation of mind is a more lafting fund of folid fatisfaction than all the wealth of the Indies.

Theodofia's offer of her fervice was accepted, and fhe remained with him. Not long after, a relation of his died and left him a good fortune; and, when he died, he bequeathed her a very comfortable maintenance.

Her mother was an excellent woman; the lived to the uncommon age of 101; the will be recorded in flory, as long as marble thall endure, in thefe words. (a)

Let it be remembered,

That there is no flation in which industry

(a) This relates to the character of Elizabeth [Monk, engraved upon a ftone in Bromley churchyard, in Kent. Will not confer honour. She had been long prepared, By a fimple and unaffected piety, For that awful moment,

Which, however delayed, is univerfally fure. How few are allowed an equal time of probation! How many by their lives prefume upon more!

But yet more to perpetuate the leffon of her life, This from was erected by voluntary contributions.

If a fervant is capable of the duty required, and the mafter not tyrannical, neither of them fhould be diffurbed by little incidents. Each fhould make a candid allowance for the other's frailties. If mafter and fervant diflike each other, or a fervant is really unfit for a place, let them part, with good wifnes for their mutual profperity.

My mafter used to remark, that " the more fervants a man keeps, the more fpies he has on him;" and expressed his astonishment that any person should make work for many servants, or keep them from work in order to make up a train.

Solomon's advice to the mafter is, "Be not exceffive towards any, and without differentiation do nothing." And, fpeaking of a good fervant, he fays, "If thou haft a fervant, entreat him as a brother, for thou haft need of him as of thine own foul; and if thou entreat him evil, he will run from thee; and which way wilt thou go to feek him?"

So

So far regards the common duty of humanity. But in order to underftand this matter, MARY, obferve what the fame man of wifdom tells us, in regard to the prudence of a mafter : "If thou fet thy fervant to labour, thou fhalt find reft; but if thou let him go idle, he fhall feek liberty. Set him to work, as is fit for him : if he be not obedient, put on more heavy fetters."

It is very evident what is meant by heavy fetters; he fhould be more confined for his own fake, as well as his mafter's. Difobedience and pride naturally produce idlenefs, and "idlenefs is the key of beggary." A fervant may complain, but he who does not learn to obey as a fervant ought, will hardly ever command as a mafter ought. The proverb fays, "an ill fervant will never make a good – mafter."

Humility is a virtue required in all flations, but a proud fervant, of all God's creatures, is the flrangeft inconfiftency. Pride and vanity lead to the depths of diffrefs. Half the wretched beings of thy fex, who live on the deplorable wages of iniquity for the flort time they live at all, owe their being difcharged out of fervice to pride.

Submiffion is another branch of the fame duty. St. Peter recommends to us, with the force of a divine commandment, "" Servants be fubject to your mafters with all fear, not only to the good and gentle, but alfo to the froward : for this is thank-worthy, if a man, for confcience towards God, endure grief, fuffering wrongfully. For what glory is it, if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye fhall take it patiently? But if when ye do well and fuffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God."

This advice which recommends patience and forbearance to the fervant, does not authorife any tyrannical or inhuman conduct on the part of the master. It checks the refentments of the fervant from flaming into rage or revenge, and teaches him to compafiionate a master's infirmities; but it does not take away the fervant's right of leaving a 'fervice, or appealing to the laws of his country, for any unjustifiable conduct on the part of the master. There are cafes in which it is neceffary, "the knee fhould bow though the underftanding cannot:"-~ This depends on the prudence of a fervant, as well as his comprehension of the true nature of his fituation. Always confider calmly what the evil is, and what the remedy may be. "He that fhoots at the ftars may hurt himfelf, but cannot endanger them." A mafter or mistrefs may admonish once or twice, or thrice, but a continued repetition of the fame faults or inadvertencies will tire out the most patient.

My mafter was of a quick temper, and fometimes faid what he might as well have omitted : but he was of a humane, friendly, and pious difpofition, tion, and generally corrected himfelf. He overlooked many of nly faults, and therefore I was the more patient under his. If thy miftrefs is of a lively quick temper, thou wilt often think her impatient, though fhe fhould have the patience to tell thee ten times a day of the fame fault: but I chargethee to beware of impatience, left thou fhouldft make a pert reply, and at once flow thyfelf illmannered and ungrateful, and ruin thyfelf in her favour.

My advice to thee is, that inflead of refenting, thou fhouldft learn to compaffionate: D6 not imagine that mercy and compaffion were made to be exercised only by the great and wealthy towards inferiors; the ricl and powerful themselves are frequently as great objects of pity as those who beg their bread. By no means pretend to be fo wife as thy mistrefs: if there should be good reason for believing thyself to be in the right, and her in the wrong, yet remember how much the chance is against thee, not only from thy want of age and experience, but from the lowness of thy education, and the want of those means of obtaining knowledge which she has enjoyed.

Above all things avoid exportulation with thy miftrefs. It is too common a trick with paffionate perfons, when reproached, to tell mafters and miftreffes that they underftand their bufinefs, forgetting that their chief bufinefs is to obey. Confider what thou mayft lofe, and how improbableit is that thou fhouldft gain any thing by pert repliee, and the gratification of talking. No mafter or miftrefs of fpirit will bear to be flatly contradicted by a fervant, or to argue with them about indifferent matters. In cafes wherein thy virtue is not hurt, their pleafure fhould be thy law, never forgetting any thing that materially affects their intereft. If any difficulty arife in matters of fact, there is a humble way of afking leave to acquaint them how the cafe really finds.

If thou art accufed of any thing, as a fault, which thou really thinkeft to be fuch, the honeft confeffion is the fureft way of obtaining pardon. It is good policy to obferve attentively the temper a party is in, at a time when accidents happen; ufe thy diferetion in all things; forget not to avoid whatever has the appearance of fullennefs, and make ready and direct anfwers, to the beft of thy knowledge and belief, looking calmly on the perfon thou art fpeaking to. To mean well is one half the bufinefs, and patience the other. If thou wert to lend an ear to many fervants, thou wouldft fay that they ought to fit at the head of the table, inftead of waiting at it.

DISCOURSE XXI.

In these days of pleasure and distipation, MARY, the most part of the nobility and gentry of this ifland carry their families to London, where fervants entertain each other with accounts of profitable places; as how much wages fome have more than others. These do not confider to much the comfort and peace, the fafety and good treatment. they enjoy, as how much they can get; I fay, may get, for it is not the lot of one in a thousand to be in fuch fervices as are reprefented to them; nor perhaps to have abilities to keep fuch places, if they could get them.', They are apt to judge of the beft places, as people do of the greateft prize in a lottery; and in hunting after an imaginary good, often plunge themfelves into a real evil. Let me advife thee to be contented, and learn when thou art well, and not defire to be better than well. If thou find good treatment, let this be confidered as fuperior to any fuch additional wages, as thou mightft have the fortune to obtain. In thy fituation, as a very voung woman, a fondnefs for change can hardly fail to produce mifchief. I do not fay but that in due time thou mayft naturally expect an increase of wages.

If thou flouldft become a favourite, employ thy influence to keep peace in the family. Make open profeffion of thy refolution at once to be true to thy miftrefs, but not the lefs a friend to thy fellowfervants, when they do their duty.

In all cafes of difficulty let thy millrefs be acquainted, and entreat of her to decide the matter. In any cafe favourites are generally more feared than loved: and more intrigues are formed to enfnare them, than thou canft fulpect. Our good qualities often expose us to more hatred and perfecution than all the evil we do; and yet it is not the lefs true, that "honefty is the beft policy." Truth will prevail in the iffue; and it is thy duty to do the beft thou canft, fairly and honeftly, to promote thy own welfare.

If unhappily any of thy fellow fervants are omiffive in their duty, remind them in civil and obliging terms. If they will not take the advice, thou haft neverthelefs difcharged thy duty. When evil confequences follow by their not regarding thee, do not aggravate their misfortunes by taunts and reproaches, as weak minded people fometimes do. All that thould be faid is, "I wifb you bad been of my opinion." Soft words and ready anfwers, with a noble ingenuoufnefs, have a magic power to calm the most perverfe.

If thou find any fellow-fervant as well inclined as thyfelf, be her friend; but from the moment fle

is guilty of any fraud or injuffice, or entertains thee with difcourfe against the perfon whofe bread thouart eating, thou mays fuspect that the is foolish, ignorant, or perverfe. It should be thy part to foften fuch difcourfe, and palliate the real faults, much more the foibles, of thy mistrefs; but if thou condemn her when the is blamelefs, thou art guilty of injustice as well as ingratitude.

Thou wilt generally find that those who complain most of others are most blameable themselves. Reafon calmly with them; advise them to confider the condition of their fervice, to represent their grievances, not to condemn their judge before they appeal to him for justice.

As I have the happinels to be known to the lady who will take thee as a fervant into her family, I promife myfelf it will be fo much the better for thee if thou art not wanting to thyfelf. She fpoke in fuch obliging terms, and promifed me fo generoufly to be thy friend if thou deferve, that I hope fhe will be as a mother to thee.

She will probably tell thee, " fhe knows thy father to be an honeft man, and that fhe hath a refpect for him, and if thou art a true daughter of his that thou wilt be a faithful and good fervant to her, and if thy conduct floweth that thou art thou mayft be affured of her friendfhip." Now, my daughter, if thou fhouldft fet out with fuch prepoffetiion in thy favour, it will be a happy omen of fuccefs.

There

There are fome people whole thoughts are fo diffipated, that one must repeat the fame words, before they are awake enough to know what is faid tothem. This is a great unhappinefs, and very irkfome to a mafter; but it is not altogether incurable ; for, if the fervant have any delight in doing her duty, the will be attentive to the commands to which fhe is bound by every tie to be obedient. I have already mentioned to thee, that one thing neceffary to awaken attention is, to look at the perfon who is fpeaking to thee. The countenance demands refpect, and helps the understanding; and feeing the motion of another's lips affifts the hearing; whereas the want of this kind of attention is illmannered even among equals, and much more from a fervant.

Always take the first opportunity of mentioning what is necessary, particularly in cases wherein thou hast been commanded to do any thing, or hast received any melfage. Take for granted, that thy miftrefs will not be informed of what relates to her interest and thy own duty, unless thou tell her, and confider it as injustice and breach of duty to keep her in ignorance.

If thy memory is treacherous, keep a memorandum book, and by one act of recollection, which is to look into thy book, thou mayft be fure that nothing will be omitted. But as memory depends on the exercise of it; such affistance may be unneceffary, ceffary, unlefs it relate to butinefs to be done at fome diffance of time, or when there are too many particulars for the memory to retain. Experience muft teach what confidence to place in thy memory, and what affiftances are neceffary to it. Never put off any bufinefs to any diffant hour, but perform what thou canft immediately.

Take care not to fhuffle or equivocate upon being accufed of negligence. The more confeious thou art of neglect, the more thou fhouldft beg pardon. But all pretences, fuch as I thought this or that, when in truth thou didt not think at all, are abominable in the fight of God, and virtuous perfons.

Dirt and filthinefs fall within the obfervation of every one; but neatnefs and cleanlinefs, like comelinefs in perfon, are filent recommendations. Thefe are to the body what purity is to the foul. Every young woman of fentiment naturally afpires at making a cleanly appearance.

The decent and cleanly carry with them a prefumptive proof of a virtuous difpolition. Induftry is generally the companion of cleanlinefs. Even a cleanly beggar naturally engages a much higher attention than a dirty one. Confider what is proper to thy own condition, yet rather err on the cleanly fide. A flovenly good fervant of either fex is a contradiction.

1 must

I must not conclude this difcourfe without warning thee of the many fațal accidents which happen. by fire. Nine in ten are the effects of downright careleffnefs, and generally of fervants, either from being in liquor, from groß ignorance, or unpardonable thoughtlefinefs. I charge thee to confider what misfortunes and miferies may be brought on others by this element, which is To admirable a fervant, and fo terrible a mafter. Peftilence, fivord, and famine, do not make fuch fudden and outrageous havock as fire.

There are fome particulars, MARY, which, through the whole courfe of my life, I have obferved with great exactnefs. Not to leave chimneys too long unfwept. Not to burn papers, or by any other way to make a great blaze in the fireplace. Not to leave a drawing flove covered. Not to leave a poker in a fire. Not to leave a candle burning in a room. Not to leave linen airing near a fire. Not to bring a lighted candle into a clofet. Not to be any way bufy with a candle, where there is linen or paper. Not to carry a candle into a ftable without a lantern. Not to venture even the lantern and candle in a hay-loft. And where the floor of any room is grown fpongy and combuffible by age, to keep the part fo affected covered with fomething woollen, left a fpark fhould fall on it from the candle. In going to bed, ufe a fhort candle candle and a large flat candleflick, taking care in both cafes never to be without an extinguisher; and not to bring a lighted candle near a bed. These are rules which I recommend to thee to be observed, as thou regardest thy duty to God and thy neighbour, and as thou meanest to avoid the punishment which the laws of the land inflict on the careless as well as the wilful.

DISCOURSE. XXII.

TEMPERANCE, MARY, is the friend to reafon, the companion to religion, the child of virtue, and the parent of health. The wife man fays, "Sound fleep cometh of moderate eating, he rifeth early and his wits are about him; but the pains of watching and choler, and pangs of the belly, are with an infatiable man." Nature is relieved by a little good food taken in time, and we grow firong and healthy; but eating above measure destroyeth health, wounds peace, and banisheth comfort from our hearts.

Many act as if eating were their paradife. Regard not thy tafte above measure, but acquire a habit of indifference : hunger will relift the plainest food, and thou wilt take the properest quantity.

Daintinefs in diet, in people of fortune, makes them contemptible: it is a proof of a fickly mind much oftener than it is required by a fickly body. But when fervants are dainty, and not contented with common food, they betray their depraved inclinations, and become a nuifance to a family.— High-cooked diffees are poifonous, they inflame the blood. SOLOMON'S advice is, "Eat as becometh " thee, thee, fuch things as are fet before thee, and devour not left thou be hated." Confult the pleafure of others as well as thy own, and be not impatient to feize thy food, nor eat it fafter than is decent and wholefome. In general we eat much too faft; and this acts doubly againft us, for by fuch means we are the more eafily betrayed into eating too much.

Beer is our common liquor, and, when good in its kind, is excellent for those who work hard; but the pure element which nature affords, being likewise good of its kind, is the grand medicine as well as aliment of life. Hast thou not heard how it removes the fatal effects of intemperance? What crowds of the miserable rich go to water-drinking places and recover, and then return to their former way of living, and die ten or twenty years sooner than they might, entailing the gout and other diforders on their children.

I have learnt by experience that water is the beft prefervative from difeafes; but people may drown their bowels by drinking too much of it. Even bad water may be rendered wholefome by boiling and infufing herbs of our own growth (a).

After

the

(a) Ground ivy, mint, fage, or rolemary, being dried and infused in boiling water, and drunk cold, either of these infusions, commonly called tea, is incomparably better than bad fmall-beer, which the poor often drink; and they would esteem it, but that

P

After mentioning the infufion of our own herbs, I cannot avoid taking notice how mankind grow fantaftic in their appetites. Thou haft heard of a Chinefe drug called tea, which for many years paft fome people have drunk becaufe others did; which numbers now condemn as hurtful to them, yet ufe it; which people of the moft different conflictuions take in common; and with which I have no doubt many deftroy their health, even granting that it may be good for fome, and that a little poifon kill none. Servants alfo run mad about tea; they fpend a large portion of their wages in it, and fquander too great a part of their time.

(152) ...

As to the poor, they are flupidly infenfible how they are galled in their health by the bad fort of tea. which they often drink, by the habit of fipping inflead of drinking, and by ufing fo much hot liquor when cold would answer better to invigorate them. They also confume a large portion of their, time, and their gains by hard labour make themfelves wings and fly to China for this bitter draught.— Would to God that they were wife enough to fpend their money in fubftantial food and raiment!

. The

the herbs are not properly gathered and dried, and the infufion is ufually made too firong. I am now fuppofing places where water is not good; but in. England we are for the most part happy in this particular.

The fingle article of butter, which our forefathers used to eat only as a dainty, is become necessary to tea-drinking, though this alfo is as ill fuited to fome conditutions as the tea itfelf.

Female fervants, like other people, have a right to their fhare of the improvements which time and riches, skill and industry, have made. But I am afraid, MARY, we travel too fast ; young women in. fervice affire to drefs too much like their mistrefles, which gives them a wrong turn. If thy miftrefs should give thee any of her own clothes, confider what is proper for thee to wear, and in what fhape, and what to fell.

Let me next warn thee against the deadly effect of air, when rendered corrupt by too many people being in a place, or by being too much confined. The poor are happy that their doors and windows are feldom very tight, yet they are frequently kept fhut when they fhould be open. Nature is fo indulgent to us, that a minute will change the mafs of air in. a finall room. Chimney-boards are alfo hurtful, as obstructing the free circulation of air. Even in the extremity of cold, the fleeping in a fmall room, with the chimney thus flut up, I have found to be very hurtful. When the poor are fick, they imagine that warmth is fo neceffary to their cure, that they frequently poifon themfelves with their own confined air. P 2

I have often lamented the hard fate of young ladies, in the height of their charms, who, if they had been farmers' daughters, or not poifoned in a bad air, nor chilled by flimfy coverings, might have lived to old age. My dear MARY, avoid flows in clofe places, and all fuch foolifh entertainments, as are not worth the hazard of health to any body in their fenfes.

DISCOURSE XXIII.

It is the duty, my daughter, of every one to make the most of their education: in this free country, where women have the fame privileges as men, they may with the fame propriety be taught to read.

The men who do the hard labour and drudgery of life are not the most instructed, and therefore it becomes the more beneficial to a family that a wifeshould be able to affist the husband. If she is in: any degree qualified to instruct her children, whilst the father is in the field, she will save for much, and probably teach them better than, any old woman in. the neighbourhood could do.

We are commanded to read the fcriptures, and, for the fame reafon, obliged to teach our children to read. If all of us were fo taught, no one could pretend to be above laborious employments, for we fhould know, from the word of God, that labour is the condition of human life. The wifdom, which, is the glory, of human nature, is within the compafs of us all. The great end of learning, my dear MARY, " is to know God, and out of that know ledge to love and obey him." Thou wilt perceive, that in most inftances which concern God, we cannot carry our thoughts fo high, or find language proper to exprefs them, but as we borrow words from fenfe. The fcriptures, which were written for our learning, fpeak of the anger and love, the hands and the eyes, of God; at the fame time that we are to guard againft grofs conceptions, as we know that God is a fpirit, not vifible to mortal eyes, infinite in purity, and devoid of paffion. Such wifdom will avail us when all the learning that our fuperiors can boaft of, if not applied to the fame purpofes, or made a bad ufe of, will leave them in a much worfe condition than if they had remained in the groffeft ignorance.

However neceffary reading may be to learn our duty to our Maker, and occafionally to employ our hearts agreeably to his will, as contained in the holy feriptures, the fame cannot be faid of writing. It feems reafonable, in our rank and condition, that women fhould be taught to write rather than men; and the more, as the duties of a fhop may in general be as well performed by a woman as a man. In any cafe, a woman may be of equal fervice to receive or pay, take in or deliver out by weight or meafure; but fhe cannot act the part of a failor or foldier, nor do the bufinefs of a ploughman, a carpenter, a fmith, or a bricklayer.

" Prudence is an univerfal virtue, which enters into the composition of all the reft. Judgment is its its throne, and filence its fanctuary." Young people are more prodigal than old ones. Whether thou haft little or much, take care of it, and do not expend it in vanity. Money may ftand thy friend, when others fail thee. The caution holds ftronger for thofe who have but little, than for thofe who have a great deal. In money affairs, MARY, remember that "often counting makes good friends."

Charity feems to forbid our miftrufting any one, yet there can be no doubt, but that it would be madnefs to truft thofe with thy goods, or thy perfon, who fhow no fear of God, nor refpect for the laws of their country. Let them talk as they pleafe, "deeds are fruit; words are but leaves." The more lavifh fuch perfons are in their promifes, the lefs they are to be depended on.

The innocent filly lamb in the fable, was fo credulous, that the wolf perfuaded thim he did not feed on flefh, as was vulgarly imagined, but on green pattures; "Why then" fays the lamb, "we may as well feed together;" and creeping from within his inclofure, joined the wolf;—to be devoured, as you may eafily imagine. Nay, I am forry to tell thee, MARV, that it is no ftrange thing for people to put on the difguife of piety and religion, the better to enfnare thofe who, being honeft and upright themfelves, think well of the reft of mankind.

Women

Women who are really modeft, never make a boaft of modefty, for that is in effect being immodeft. A true fense of fliame is founded on virtue, for we ought to blufh in fecret even at a thought which religion condemns. Cultivate fuch purify of mind, as may render thee acceptable to him,. in whole eyes thy heart is open. Whatever thy company may be, take care not to offend against modefty, by any word or action; and avoid giving any fmile of approbation, when words of a double meaning are fpoken; and ftill more if they are in direct terms indecent. Jeft not against the rules of good manners ; rather ftudy how to be useful to thy. companions, than how to divert them : Solid fenfeis preferable to wit; the first is always beneficial, the laft feldom fails to be dangerous.

The wife man fays, "If thou be invited of a mighty man, withdraw thyfelf, and fo much the more will he invite thee;" intimating that modefly towards fuperiors is the ready way to be treated with refpect. In the fame manner, when thou art confcious of ignorance, or when prudence forbids thee to fpeak, talking will at once difcover thy want of fenfe, as well as modefly. "Too great a diffurult of onefelf, produces a bafe fear, which depriving a man of his liberty and affurance, makes our reafonings weak, our words trembling, and our actions faint." But obferve, that there is the fame difference difference between affurance, confidered as a reafonable confidence in what we fay or do, and impudence, as between true modefty and bashfulnefs.

Those who defire to do what is commendable, and yet from bashfulness cannot show themselves to the world, ought not be angry with it, if others less deserving promote their fortune in a more effectual manner.

DISCOURSE XXIV.

The bar shares and

FRIENDSHIP being the frongest obligation to the practice of virtue, as it regards particular perfons, and the greatest comfort amidst the various calamities of life, whatever thy fortune may otherwife be, I hope, MARY, thou wilt find a friend.

There are not many who have fense and virtue enough to be capable of true friendship, therefore be careful with whom thou contractest an intimacy. Sincerity of heart and freedom of behaviour often pafs for friendship; but to be a friend it is neceffary to have a good temper and a steadiness of mind, with fuch a degree of knowledge as may enable one to give and take advice. Friends mutually compaffionate each other, and they must render themfelves a mutual fupport. They fhould never fay or do any thing harfhly when the fame thing can be done with tendernefs. If thou fhouldft ever have a friend, avoid all fuch kind of difcourfe in company as may undervalue her, though it fhould exalt thyfelf. Do not prefume on any friendfhip fo far as to use words of contempt or derifion, left thou fhouldft give wounds which may not be fo eafily healed. 0.2.16

Thou wilt eafily judge how, rarely fuch are to be found, to whom we may open our hearts without referve, and without danger. O MARY, "a. faithful friend is a ftrong defence, and he that hath found fuch a one hath found a treasure." Friendthip, fuch as we frequently find among virtuous perfons, lightens our forrows, and increases our joys; warns us in danger, and delivers us in diffrefs. The wealth of the world, cannot fill up the measure of our wifhes for a partner in our hearts ; fuch wifhes. being implanted in our nature. SOLOMON fays; " all flefh conforteth according to kind, and a man. will cleave to his like." Death itfelf , hath been, fought in friendship, and one hath contended with another, defiring to die himfelf to preferve his friend. I cannot tell but that the fame may have happened among women. -

A flight acquaintance is apt to lead the unwary into intimacies, which often prove deadly in their confequences. Nothing is fo dangerous as the pretended friend/bip of bad people: I fay pretended, friend/hip, for that which is real cannot exift upon bad principles. The counfel and advice of perfonsof fuperior knowledge and virtue, and who thou haft reafon to believe are fincerely interefted for thy welfare, fhould make thee ambitious of rendering thyfelf worthy of their effcem, and perhaps in the iffuethefe will prove thy beft friends.

SOLOMON

SOLOMON tells thec, "Love thy friend, and be faithful unto him; but if he betray thy fecrets, follow no more after him, for he is a roc efcaped out of the fnare." Shame, or fear of thy refentment, will make him fly thee. Difclofing a fecret under circumftances of the greatest temptation will make a breach; but it may be closed by great repentance on one fide, or great compassion on the other.

As to friendship with a woman of a blemished character, shun this, or thou wilt be suspected of entertaining the same sentiments. Young women are warm in their intimacies, and apt to show more distinction to each other, as friends, than is consistent with civility to the rest of the world, such appearances should likewife be avoided.

If thou fhould happen to break with thy friend, fhow thy forrow by thy filence; and not, like a filly faithlefs girl, blab out all thou knoweft of her. This is as wicked as it is weak, fince thou wert trufted on thine honour without any condition. Let her do as fhe pleafes; be thou fixed as a rock that fands the utmost force of dashing waves or storms and tempests.

My dear MARY, observe these rules! Be flow in choosing a friend, and flower still to change. Be courteous to all; intimate with few. Slight none for their low condition, nor esteem any for their wealth and greatness. Be not furprised nor difmayed, difmayed, to hear plaufible excufes, from those who are unwilling to do thee a fervice, if on the prefumption of friendship, thou should venture to ask a kindnefs. In no cafe owe an obligation to one whom thou believest to be wicked. Nover suppress that tendernefs with which a good heart naturally overflows, when those whom thou hast ever efteemed are in real diffrefs.

Love, when supported by the judgment, seems to include friend (bip; but in regard to friend flip between the fexes, in youth it is rarely to be found. without a mixture of love on one fide or the other: I mean that tendernels which is fo natural to the heart. Aniong the elder, indeed, the flame may be fo gentle and lambent as to change its name; and when it is founded upon right principles, that is, when it takes its rife from a heart-felt efteem for amiable and virtuous qualities, fuch as the piety, the integrity, the felf-government, the benevolence, of our friend ; and when our affection is further cemented by the exertion of these virtues, not in felfindulgences, but for the good of all to whom our kind offices can in any way extend, then may we be certain that fuch friendships will not expire with age, or be terminated by death; for Christians are instructed in not to forrow as those that have no hope." We may therefore reft affured, that fuch friendflups will be revived and perpetuated in the - future future world; and indeed, without the profpect and hope of this, even heaven itfelf would lofe one of its fweeteft attractions. Moreover, the bearing in mind continually this hope and expectation is of powerful efficacy to purify and exalt our affections, to animate our zeal in the Christian courfe, and to be effecially concerned not to mix any thing in our friendships that will not bear the holy eye of God.

As I would not omit any fubject in which thou mayft be interefted, I will put thee yet more on thy guard with refpect to love; for, as this is well or ill directed, it may render thee happy or miferable. - Thofe who become wretched by this affection, plead that other paffions are for the most part of a malignant kind ; but let me tell thee, MARY, when the mind is infected with love, there is nothing fo ferious or comic, fo generous or bafe, which may not directly or remotely proceed from it. The proverb fays, " Follow love and it will. flee thee; flee love and it will follow thee." If this teaches modefty, it also informs us that there is much folly and caprice in love. When we afcribe to the perfons beloved qualities they do not poffefs, we, in effect, fall in love with the creature of our own brain ; and this I take to be no uncommon cafe.

In our ordinary acquaintance, and yet more in our

our friendfnips, it is hardly probable but that the perfons and converfation of fome people fhould be more pleafing and delightful to us than those of others; but to be unhappy becaufe we are not in the company of a particular perfon is at once a proof of love, and not lefs of the foolifhness of that heart, the pleafures of which are fo narrowly cir-cumferihed.

It is not uncommon for a woman to imagine herfelf the object of a man's love, whether the defires to be fo or not; as vain men often mittake the civilities of women for love. Thou, my daughter, mayft be fubject to a double affault, either by the reality of thy affection or the vanity of a man; and as a great part of my fex is not remarkable for honefty in love, thou thould the for much the more fufpicious, and doubly on thy guard.

Nothing is to common in love as believing abfurdities which favour the paffions, except the lavifh profeffions which are made on fuch occafions; and hence arifes the danger. The language of paffion may fometimes express the integrity of the heart, yet it is not to be trufted without great caution; and fhe who makes no preparation for a retreat in cafe of danger may be obliged to furrender at differentian, and find herfelf at length in the hands of an enemy inftead of a friend. Remember that nothing is more dangerous, in thy condition, than the unjuft Q 2 However blameable many an honeft girl may have been in giving way to her affections, yet, being really honeft, fhe hath preferred prefent forrow and difappointment, even although it may have fhortened her life, rather than do any thing which virtue forbad.

People of the beft underftanding retain impreffions longeft, and often carry them to the grave. The most benevolent feem to be the most fusceptible of love, and therefore should be most upon their guard. Love, as an affection of the foul which enlarges and improves the mind, holds affinity with angels; as an appetite of the body, it is common to brutes. True love hath its root in virtue. Conftancy is united with it; and where it fubfists in the married state, adversity cannot divide it from the heart.

The foolifh and wicked of both fexes generally confort together, and are mutually influenced by each other. Many a young fellow have I feen going to the gallows on the account of a bad woman!

True modefty is equal in both fexes; but by the cuftom of the world, women are obliged to be the most referved in the difcovery of their affections. Whether Whether this is an advantage or not, I cannot tell.

Advice is feldom welcome when it croffes a favourite inclination; but is it not far better to feel a fhort pain in breaking off a dangerous treaty, than be punified feverely all our lives for believing too well of any one against proof?

Thou haft heard of fome young women, and perhaps a few young men alfo, who, defpairing of an union with their beloved object, or in a fit of phrenzy, have done fome defperate violence on themfelves. Is not this converting love into a child of the devil? Whether madnefs be created by a raging fever or a fit of love, it is ftill madnefs; and whether it be in love or hatred, if we trefpafs againft heaven, we fhall fuffer by it.

Love having nothing to do with pomp, our humble condition is lefs fubject to deceit than that of the rich, for people naturally follow affection when they are poor; and those who have no wealth, nor ever had any prospect of living in affluence, have reason to hope they may support love without any other aids than health, industry, and virtue : and it certainly is more in favour of love to have no want but of money, than to want every thing but money.

The folly of fuch love will be as great, and probably more bitter in its confequences, than if thou wert to fix thine heart upon a man fo much fuperior in condition as to afford thee no profpect of being united to him. DISCOURSE XXV.

SORRY I am to be conftrained to tell thee, MARY, (but it is neceffary thou fhouldft know the truth.) there are fuch vile wretches of both fexes on this fair earth as blufhen the heavenly face of modefly to think of. ' Like the devil, they go about feeking whom they can devour; and when they have accomplished their foul ends, they laugh at the mifery they have created, and fpurn at the' object they have deluded into destruction. Some even traffic in fin, and blot the most beautiful workmanfhip of heaven with fuch hideous ftains as might draw tears from the ftony rock. These evil spirits in human form flatter and promife, and fwear as prodigally as if they were to gain heaven, and are as falfe as hell, whence their deceitful fpeeches come; they prefent the flattering flow of pleafure before the heedlefs eyes of young women, and draw them on till they fall into the pit of destruction.

These enemies to virtue attempt boldly to perfuade a young woman that things which are really the worst in the world are the best. Little regarding the curse denounced against those who call evil good, good, and good evil, they practife the arts of the devil, when under a fpecious difguife he deceived our first parent. A fmall portion of fense and reafon might show the fallacy of all arguments, hopes, and expectations, in favour of actions⁴ which are contrary to virtue. Listen not to them, but remember, " that virtue which parleys is near a furrender."

Well do I remember fome of my good neighbours' daughters whom nothing would pleafe but going up to London, as if they were fure of making their fortunes. Some of them have lived virtuoufly, fingle or married, and fucceeded in the world; but it hath fared ill with feveral of the most diftinguished for comelinefs. As foon as they arrived in town, they fell into the fnares of those abandoned. procureffes who, under the pretence of getting them good places, brought them like birds to the net, or lambs to the flaughter; witnefs -----, and ____, and others, who did not use the precaution, before they left their parents, to correspond with fuch friends in town as they might truft themfelves with till proper places could be provided for them. It is impoffible that thou, or any country girl, fhould fuspect half the wicked arts which are played off to feduce young females. I muft alfo caution thee, that in all cafes, particularly if thou fhould apply to a public register-office, it will be neceffary to inform thyfelf exactly of the character of

of the perfon who propofes to take thee as a fervant.

I charge thee likewife, as thou lovest thy foul, not to indulge any defire of being gaudily attired. If thou fould feel thine heart incline to this vanity, get thyfelf cured of it as a difeafe, which, if neglected, will prove morial. Childifh as this paffion is, I know that it hath been the ruin of many thoulands, and it may tempt thee to forget those leffons which I have fought fo anxioufly to imprint on thy heart. From the moment thou fixeft thy fancy on dreffing like a gentlewoman, I fhall tremble left thy deftruction should be at hand. What has been the fate of those who seek the trappings of folly as the wages of iniquity ? What numbers of young women, without any other inclination to wickednefs, have been undone by the immoderate love of drefs and pastime! My master was not a debauchee, but he had opportunities of knowing what multitudes of young women accomplish their own destruction by the force of this restless vanity. Among abandoned women, intemperance and difeafe bring on confumptions and decay, and few of them live beyond the age of twenty-five. Alas, my daughter ! how deplorably are those fallen, who thus offer themfelves as facrifices, at the altars of vice and ' impurity !

In all conditions, remember that chriftianity requires nothing at our hands more clearly, or in a ftronger fironger manner, than chaftity or purity; and this confifts in a fixed abhorrence of all forbidden fenfual indulgence, in a refolute guard over our thoughts and paffions, in a firm abfinence from the moft diffant occafions of luft and wantonnefs, in a confcioufnefs or deep fenfe of the perfect holinefs of God, and of his being prefent everywhere. It likewife confifts in a conviction of the certain truths of our religion, and that there can be no hope of falvation where this virtue is not cherifned. Therefore he not entangled in the fnares of descitful lufts, for thefe do confeffedly war againft the foul; and if this, is conquered, all is loft to the foul of the function of the foul of the function of the foul of the foul of the foul of the function of the foul of the foul of the function of the foul of the foul of the function of the foul of the foul of the function of the foul of the foul of the function of the foul of the function of the function of the foul of the function of fon or the gallows ! I charge thee, MARY, to be watchful of thy words. Unguarded convertation generally opens the door to mifchief: it looks like a defign to throw down the barrier of chaftity. From the moment thou permittent any man to be thy confidant, or alloweft thyfelf to converte with him alone, except where there is an honourable and fuitable treaty approved of by thy friends, it is moft natural to conclude there is fome danger to fuch a girl as thyfelf. On the other hand, thou muft exercise fome fome skill in thy referve, not to appear prudifly, and fubject thyfelf to ridicule.

People of fortune generally observe a more ftrict decorum, than the condition of fervitude will for the moft part admit of; and domeftics therefore ftand in need of more caution. But without any domparison of conditions; build thy caution on this great principle; that human nature is frail; that religion doth not keep the generality of men in awe, in any degree equal to what might be reafonaably expected : rich men are apt to prefume on the humble condition of poor girls, to mark them as their prey; not confidering that the foul of a chambermaid is as valuable as the foul of a queen. If you are wife, MARY, let not your fancy loofe to think of tying the knot for life, with any man above a farmer, or a tradefinan, who is honeft and not weak.1 If any gentleman should honestly or difhoneftly commend your perfon, as if he wifhed to poffefs it, let it pass as words which he may be accultomed to fpeak. In the first place, even if it fhould be his opinion, a truly honeft and a generous character would have concealed it; as the avowing of fuch fentiments, where nothing further is intended, can only lead either to fomething very wrong, or to the making both parties unhappy: but if, what is most likely, nothing more is meant than mere flattery, it is then unquestionably a bait thrown out wildom to fhut your ears and to guard your heart against fuch addreffes.

The generofity of men in this cafe is not to be trufted. I can tell you a very tragic flory of this kind, in which I acted a confiderable part. The daughter of a yeoman of reputation in this country was feduced by a young gentleman; he had promifed to marry her, and fhe depended upon his honour. Her father was my old acquaintance, and intreated me to talk to him. I made him a vifit, and amongft a variety of arguments told him, that he did not know the mifchief he had done: adding, "I have heard her mournful tale ; I have feen the rifing fobs that fhake her foul : her father's pillow is wet with briny tears; and her mother's cheeks redden with fhame, whilft indignation prevents the utterance of her griefs ! O fhame ! fhame ! that man fhould fawn and flatter, and mean-what fhall I fay ?---Mean to be a villain ? You will pardon me, fir-That men in fuch cafes act like villains you must grant. Curfed be the pleafure which is dyed fo deep in guilt, and creates fo much pain and forrow !"

He told me he would make her a proper allowance, but could not poffibly think of marying her, as he fhould difoblige his friends, and mar his fortune. She, on the other hand, was not in want of a decent fupport, and would not accept his offer. Grief for fuch ill treatment threw her into a confumption, and the died in a few months after.

When it was too late indeed he repented, and was almost raving with the confciousness of having acted to bafely. "O my friend," he faid, "how shall I banish from my heart the remembrance of my dear Caroline? How shall I forget the last parting fcene? It is but to die, she faid, though it be a death of torture! With my last breath will I pray for your prosperity! It is the decree of heaven that I should be thus chassified; thy will, O God, be done! May the remembrance of my fad fate never disturb your breast, unless it should bleed with fympathetic forrow for my guilt, and prepare my foul for heaven!"

Recollections like thefe harrowed up his foul. His reafon was foon afterwards impaired. He was often feen walking by himfelf, and, burfting into an agony, erying out, O Caroline! Caroline! I was thy murderer! He feldom flept above two hours at a time; and, as certain as he awoke, the fame thought occurred to his mind. His eyes looked hollow, his lips' wore a livid palenefs, as if he withered at the heart. His friends carried him into fcenes of amufement; thefe made him figh the more. He died foon after with melancholy.

Attend, MARY, and take warning! I am affured of thy prefent innocency: I know thou doft gonize whilf I am talking thus; but anxious as I am for thy fafety, thou wilt forgive me, MARY, if I fay too much. We are about to part, and it is fit I fhould communicate to thee my knowledge of the ways of the world, and the means of flumning the evils of it.

am

O my daughter, I now declare to thee, in the awful prefence of the God whom I adore, I had rather fee the blood fiream from thy bofom than behold thee, in the arms even of a king, on any terms but an honourable marriage, fuch as divine and human laws appoint for the virtuous. If thou wert to firay from virtue's facred paths, though floods of briny tears would fall from thy fond father's eyes, thefe could not wafh thee clean; but the day would come when they would rife in judgment againft thee.

DISCOURSE XXVI.

THIS is the laft day in which I may ever communicate my thoughts to thee with fuch freedom and uninterrupted fatisfaction as providence has indulged us with fince the time thou wert eapable of liftening to the voice of reafon, and of forming thy mind to a relifh of fuch truths as I am able to communicate to thee.

The fubject of our conversation yesterday naturally leads to the confideration of marriage. The many mischiefs which may be imputed to the lawless commerce of the fexes feem to turn in favour of this honourable alliance.

Marriage ought to be in high effimation, not only as the flate moft fafe to virtue, and in which fo great a part of private happinefs confifts, but as beft calculated to promote the welfare of our country. The Almighty, in the great order of his providence, having made the fexes for the mutual aid and fupport of each other, it is highly reafonable to prefume, that when people come to an age of judgment, and are wealthy, or fit to get their bread by their fkill or labour, marriage is the proper flate of life; and nothing can be a fironger incentive to it than the affections implanted in the human breaft.

Happy it is when this union is cemented by a , fuitablenefs of difpofition. Piety is undoubtedly the bond that can never fail; but I have wondered, when I have feen the fad effects arising from perverfenefs of humour, that even common prudence did not influence perfons fo connected to be obliging and condefcending to each other. The extreme folly of the contrary conduct is well-illuftrated by the fable of the two hounds. They are reprefented as very fond of each other, but being young dogs, the huntiman coupled them, to prevent their following every fcent, and hunting diforderly. They expressed great uneafiness at their fituation: if one chofe to go this way, the other was eager to go the contrary, till at length they came to a downright quarrel. An old hound, who had obferved what was paffing, reproved them in thefe terms: "What a couple of filly puppies you are to be perpetually worrying at this rate ! . What hinders your going on peaceably and quietly together ? Cannot you compromife the matter, by confulting each others inclinations a little? At least, try to make a virtue of neceffity, and fubmit to what you cannot remedy. You cannot get rid of the chain, . but you may make it fit eafy, and you will find by experience, that mutual compliances not only compenfate for liberty, but are attended with delight." I have

I have heard it ferioufly maintained, that the mifery of fervants may be dated from their marriage Such an uncomfortable doctrine fuppofes day. that their wages are no ways equal to their expenses, when they have any children to provide for. This opinion proves too much, for experience may be appealed to against it as well as for it. Those who are extravagant or indolent are hardly fit-to be trufted in the marriage ftate; and the child born to fuch parents comes into the world under a great difadvantage: but marriage fometimes awakens the attention of the most thoughtlefs, and every one may obferve, that the industrious and provident, and fuch as are virtuoufly inclined, generally fuceed in wedlock.

As to the proper time of marriage, if thou haft a prudent offer, and no weighty reafon to the contrary, marry in the early part of life; but if thou letteft thy youth and thy middle age pafs without marriage, if thou art wife, thou mayft as well continue fingle. Whether thou marrieft a young man, or one of middle age, confult his temper, and carefully avoid giving him offence; and above all, I warn thee againft jealoufy. As there can be no government where there is no ruler, fhe, who hath more fenfe than her hufband, will fhow it by her prudence and fear of God; ftill yielding the fu-R 3 periority to him whom God hath fet over her: fhe may fecretly govern him; but openly to affume the command, except in very extraordinary cafes, is a proof that her understanding falls very flort of the true mark.

Rather think how to forgive real offences in thy hufband than create imaginary ones. If once the mind is poffeffed with a jealous phrenzy, it lofes the exercise of reason; and every object that relates to love is armed with the flings of feorpions to poilon peace.

Give jealoufy to the wind, and banifh thy difquiet. Wert thou perfuaded of real infidelity in thy hufband, yet if thou haft a wifh to thare his heart, to regain all his affection, and turn it into its proper channel, be affured, that if he hath any fenfibility, thy tendernefs and love, with his recollection of what religion requires, will fubdue his heart, and by the ftings of confeience convert him; and if he hath no fentiments of virtue, rage and refentment on thy part will only aggravate thy misfortanes, and make two evils inftead of one, rendering thy condition the more diffrefsful.

As to the revenge which fome take, it is not fo much a proof of refertment as an evil inclination; it is a fymptom of a fick and crazed mind; it is like a man's murdering himfelf becaufe another has attempted to kill him; for fhe who proceeds to the the extremity of repaying fuch an injury by proftitution does but plunge a dagger into her own bofom, as if fhe was the aggreffor, and meant to feek her punifhment even in the deftruction of her foul. Command thyfelf, MARY; patience and good humour work miracles, and I hope thefe will always fecure thy hufband's love, that thy days may pafs in uninterrupted tranquillity; remembering that religion is then of most ufe when the greatest calamities invade us, and that calm refignation to the will of heaven is the grand medicine which cures all the evils incident to human life.

If a woman difcovers that meeknels, modefly, and prudence in living according to the circumflances of her hufband, are her truefl ornaments, fhe will likewife find wherein her interefl confifts. The proverb fays, "The foot on the cradle, and hand on the diftaff, is the fign of a good houfewife." This teaches that a woman inclined to virtue and induftry is at once able to manage her family and retain the affection of her hufband, and educate her children according to her condition. Nothing can be fo defirable to a man as a good wife.

Happy had it been for Harry Winter if he had preferred Sally Sweet to Rebecca Wander! He acknowledged Sally's perfections; but, in his eyes, the air, air, the grace, the form of Rebecca, were irrefifible, and at length he married her. She had been ufed to the triumphs of beauty, and never rightly informed of any thing. She is of fo turbulent and impetuous a temper as not to brook contradiction or difappointment. Her refertments are as keen as her vanity is uncontroulable. All her hufband's wages are hardly fufficient to find her in top-knots, &c. Where is their mighty love? They are parting with mutual difguft.

Poor Harry is much to be pitied, for though a "virtuous woman is a crown to her hufband, fhe that maketh afhamed is rottennefs in his bones."

But in common cafes, if neither are very wicked, it is with hufband and wife as with mafter and fervant, if but one of the parties faithfully perform their duty they can fcarcely be extremely miferable. As an inftance of this, there is Jane Sprightly. She is young and lively, and much beloved by her hufband; fhe defired him the other day to carry her to the fair, which he declined by giving her a variety of reatons for fo doing ; adding, My dear. Jane, you look as if you were difplcafed; what are all the fairs in the world, or all the women that attend the fairs, to me, compared to your fmiles.? I can bear any thing better than your frowns, except the confcioufnefs of doing that which in its effects will hurt you : I would not do you harm for the world; world; not even at your own requeft; and no one can judge fo well as myfelf what will hurt you. Jane has good fenfe and candour, and heard him attentively. He fpoke with fuch perfuafive eloquence, in regard to the fincerity of his love, fhe could no longer refift; but fmoothing her brow, with a fweet finiling air, fhe faid, "In good faith, my dear Jofbua, though I had a fancy for the fair, it was but a fancy, and I believe that thou art in the right: give me thy hand as a token of calm obedience and fincere affection." She kiffed it eagerly. Thus a proper exertion of prudence, though only on one fide, may be of effential importance to both.

To this end, I will give thee one lefton more, which thou wilt eafily understand, for it is founded on the plainest fense and reason. The ready way to fecure a husband's affection and duty is to be truly affectionate and dutiful as a wife, and always as agreeable as thou canft.

There is another affection of the mind, which relates to fociety at large. Whether thou fhouldft marry or remain fingle, cherifh in thy bofom a tendernefs for children. The woman devoid of an affection hardly deferves the name of a woman. Children are a large part of mankind; and childhood being without guile, they are at once the objects of our love and refpect. Remember the regard which was fhown them by the Saviour of the world, when, when, in allufion to their innocency, he declared, "Of fuch are the kingdom of heaven !" My mafter, ufed to fay, that no compliment ever pleafed him more than that imputed to one of our poets : that he was a man of fense, but, in the fimplicity of his manners, a child.

DISCOURSE XXVII.

A TRULY rational and religious conduct being rare, always makes those who are most diftinguished appear fingular. The lady thou art to ferve is called a very particular woman : the truth is, fhe hath fo much religion, as not to be fatisfied without prayers in her family every morning and night, as if the counted the days and nights, " and numbered them fo as really to apply her heart unto wifdom." It is upon the fame-principle fhe requires of all her fervants to go to church, either in the morning or evening, every fabbath-day; and fhe abfolutely will not keep any fervant who totally declines going to the facrament of the Lord's fupper : fhe does not declare this in fo many words; but if repeated admonitions, and the most pious, humane, and friendly advice, make no impreffion, fhe difcharges them.

In order to keep herfervants virtuous, the keeps them employed, giving them this wholefome admonition; "Get thy fpindle and thy diftaff ready, and God will fend thee flax:" adding this proverb, "Tbink of eafe, but work on;" fuppofing that eafe is the object which all mankind are naturally inclined to feek, though they find it only in action.

Thy

Thy miftrefs has all the tendernefs of a woman, without the foibles ufually attending thy fex; her charity flows from her religion, and is cherished by the compassion which ftreams from her heart, and is therefore fleady and lafting. She judges always on the merciful fide, diftinguishing faults from crimes; and confiders the condition fervants are in as well as the kind of education they have had. All who ever ferved her, and have not been guilty in fuch a manner / as to render them unworthy of truft, are fure of her good word, as far as fhe can give it with a fafe confcience ; but fhe will never give a good character of a fervant who has no title to it, declaring that fhe confiders deceit in recommending fervants, out of mere compassion, and against truth, as robbing in order to give alms to the poor.

What thinkeft thou of a gentleman who, notwithflanding he knew his fervant had robbed him, recommended him to another mafter? The confequence was that he robbed him alfo; upon which he profecuted the former mafter, who was accordingly condemned to pay the lofs.

Thy miftrefs is exact in money matters, and makes up her accounts every Monday morning, paying ready money for every thing fhe buys: by this means fhe lives elegantly and fplendidly, with balf, or at most two thirds, the fum which those spend who would never pay their debts at all, if they they could cut off the long arms of the law. Her maxim in this refpect is, "Better go to bed fupperlefs, than rife in debt:" intimating, that many charges are contracted by things not neceffary; and that fome neceffary things muft be given up, rather than run in debt for them.

This lady dreffes elegantly, according to her fortune, but the confines herfelf to a certain moderate fum yearly, expending more in charity than apparel. She is at no charge for hair-dreffers, her daughter or her maid doing all the requires about her head. I have heard of fome ladies who are at a greater expense for curling their hair, than will pay the wages of two or three chambermaids.

Thou art alfo to know that thy miftrefs diflikes cards, yet not fo but the will play for an hour, to oblige her friends, in a private family. Hair-dreffing, preparation for cards, and the card-table, employ a confiderable portion of the time of our fineft people in these days, fo fmall a price do they fet on it, and all the other advantages of leifure. Often when I have obferved the way in which they fpend their time, have I felt with emphasis the force of our Lord's obfervation, "How hardly do they that have riches enter into the kingdom of heaven !" It feems as if a defire of being diffinguished in the gay circle, first enfnares, and then leads them on, till at laft they lofe themfelves in vanity and folly. As a confirmation of this remark, thou haft often heard me mention the late Lord Goodchild; alas, poor gentleman ! what an affecting inflance his life afforded of the truth of this remark! My mafter tenderly loved him, and used often to dwell with a mixture of admiration and forrow on the lights and fhades that formed his varied character. He was bleffed with an uncommon understanding, had great ftrength of mind, and withal an acuteness of perception, that at one glance comprehended whatever was prefented to him. He was naturally compaffionate, obliging, and generous; and had withal a degree of fenfibility that made his character peculiarly interefting. He was not born to the fortune "he afterwards poffeffed, but at length a large eftate was bequeathed to him; when fuddenly, to the altonishment of every one, he was feized with the love of flow and fplendor, and completely carried away by them: and this at a time of life, when even a vulgar mind, it might have been expected, would have defpifed fuch tinfelled folly.

From this fatal moment, his life was a perpetual round of fathionable diffipation. Not one polite affembly .of folly and extravagance, where you might not hear the name of my Lord Goodebild. He dreffed, he triffed, and in fhort gave up every rational fatisfaction, for no other purpofe but merely to obtain the temporary praife of the characters he defpifed. defpifed. And, wouldft theu believe it, MARY? with fuch incomparable endowments, he funk at laft into contempt, and was even defpifed by thefe very triffers.

He died after four days illnefs. During this dreadful interval, he defired to fee my master, who could never recollect, without painful fenfibility, the fad agitation of his then diffracted mind. O my friend ! I have flept, he faid, on a precipice ;. how dreadful thus to awake! My day of grace is paft." O righteous Father, whither Ihall I flee from thy prefence, that holy prefence, which was once my delight and crown of rejoicing. There was a time when I could have prayed. Alas! my friend, you know what I once was. You fee what I now am. Oh that my life were written in characters of brais, that the fons and daughters of vanity might read and take warning ! I have had uncommon advantages." You know the various circumftances of my life, and at how many different times great afflictions have been fent to call me off from thefe vanities; and that the Almighty has had, as it were, a controverly with his creature! But whither do niy agitated fpirits hurry me? What an account of my time, my abilities, and my fortune, -Anall I have to give? Can I claim one gofpel promife, who have lived in direct violation of its moft facred injunctions ? My head turns round ; I fee ; S 2 I feel;

I feel; O pray for me, I cannot now pray for myfelf !

This lady's chief delight, on the contrary, is in promoting the welfare of her fellow-creatures, as far as the can extend her power. She reads divinity, history, and travels, and fome books of ingenuity; feeking the converfation of fenfible and virtuous perfons of both fexes. As fome variety is neceffary, the changes the feene from books to needlework, and from thence to mufic, and has great pleafure in walking and riding out, effeeming the works of nature as they come immediately from the hands of God, far fuperior to all the powers of art. She hath a fine tafte in the ornamental parts of life, but efteems this, in comparison of the useful, as unworthy of praife. She is temperate in her diet, and remarkable in keeping good hours, paying for none of her amufements more than they are worth.

Though fhe appears to have, great fentibility, and is naturally of a quick temper, fhe fpeaks calmly, and has acquired fuch a command of her paffions, that fhe feems to weep or rejoice, only as a just fense of things drawn from thought and experience have taught her. She has feen and felt what it is to be unfortunate, and fays that "No one knows better what good is, than he who hath endured evil."

The confcioufnefs that fhe is endeavouring to

pafs her time on earth, agreeably to the defign of heaven, gives a peculiar cheerfulnefs and fweetnefs to her manners.

(201 .)

She often talks of death, as the end of her days, and her cares; and wonders to fee fuch a buffle among people who have already one foot in the grave. She fpeaks of her diffolution in fo familiar and unaffected a manner, that no one can doubt of her being perfectly reconciled to the will of heaven. Whatever our fortunes may be, my daughter, we might all cultivate the fame fentiments, and by degrees acquire the fame bappy turn of mind.

CONCLUSION.

WELL, MARY, remember that whether thou thouldit marry or continue iingle, thy real fum of happinefs will be proportionate to thy progrefs in virtuous attainments, and to the right performance of the feveral duties of that particular flation, whatever it may be, in which the providence of God hath placed thee. And amongst other things, remember and respect my admonitions; forget not, " that whofo honoureth his father shall have joy of his own children; and when he maketh his praver he fhall be heard." Thefe are high promifes of the most exalted happines. The wife man goes on to advife : " Honour thy father with thy whole heart, and forget not the forrows of thy mother," conveying a charming fense of the great love of a mother. He then reminds us of the curfe which attends undutifulnefs. " The eye-that mocketh his father, and despifeth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley fhall pick it out, and the young eagles fhall eat it." This is a beautiful allufion to that blindnels and perverfenels which leads fome to neglect, and fome even to infult their parents; denouncing the judgment they may expect, either by fome temporal calamity which will befal them, or by the vengeance of heaven which will overtake them : —fuch offences are of the blackeft dye.

" Our parents can never be requited :" fuch is the nature of our obligations to them. Do not forfake me, MARY, if I thould need thy help: God only can tell what may happen! It is not the cuftom of our days, for children to be fo attentive to their aged parents, as is required by the laws of God, and the obligations of fociety. In our condition, I fear fome old people are thrown on the parochial charity, whofe children might provide for them. There are many countries, where, although the inhabitants are far fhort of us, in fome refpects, yet excel in the duty of children to parents. I remember to have heard my master fay, that the Gallicians, who are labourers in the great cities of Portugal; and the Ruffians, who do the fame offices in their own country, are never fo happy as when they carry home their gains, to affift their aged parents.

Children ought to honour their parents at all times, that their children may help them; and that the great Father of mankind may be their friend, and their days be long in the land, wherein God hath given them life and health, to enjoy thefe bleffings, in the flations which his providence hath appointed them,

Heaven-

Heaven knows I have little to give thee but my good advice. Do not however think this a misfortune, for the riches of the wealthy often prove temptations to great wickedness. There have been young perfons to impatient to poffels the goods of their parents, as to think they live too long; but it is to be hoped, that we, who are poor, are in lefs danger of this great iniquity. Whatever fufferings thou mayft undergo, be courageous: remember, that thy great Lord and Mafter lived in poverty and died in pain. Never forget his life and death! To give thy mind true and just impressions of christianity, hath been the main fcope of my defign : this hath been the bent of all the care and instruction which I have bestowed on thee; and whatever the great may apprehend to the contrary, I think this of fuch confequence, that no education can be called good where it is wanting,

To-morrow we muft part, but I truft that in the love of God and goodnefs we thall ever be united,! My folemn requeft is, that as often as the day begins and ends, thou wilt not barely fay thy prayers, but endeavour to offer up the real defire of thine heart in prayer: and as a help or affiftance to the performance of this duty, I will give thee a fmall collection of prayers; alfo an abftract of the general train of devotion, which I would earneftly recommend, and a few hymns which may likewife be ufeful. Surely thou mayft have fome idea of the mighty mighty privilege of being thus, as it were, in an especial manner, admitted into the holy prefence of the universal Father of angels and of men, and of making known thy requests unto him! What would't thou think of the folly of a perfon who, having an offer from some mighty monarch of his friendship and affistance upon all needful occasions, should from indolence, or infensibility, decline to avail himfelf of it? Yet what is the greatest potentate that ever lived upon earth, the wisest, and the best, in comparison of Him who endureth from everlasting to everlasting; who fitteth in the heavens over all; upon whom the whole universe is dependent, and in respect of whom even the noblest beings in that universe are as nothing.

O MARY, there needs no further meffenger from heaven to tell us what we ought to do, and that except we repent, and are obedient, we must all perifb; but we fee how merciful our Father is, if we do repent. Learn of St. Paul, to reafon like a rational and accountable being, " if God fpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how will he not with him alfo, freely give us all things?" Is not this an argument that the weakeft may understand, and which the wifeft must admire?

PRAYERS.

endrop is in this of

Most merciful God, the mighty guardian and protector of mankind, who haft fafely brought me to the beginning of this day; I befeech thee to · Ter . continue continue thy mercies to me! And, as I am going into a world furrounded by fnares, and befet with temptations, grant that this day I may fall into no fin, neither run into any kind of danger; but that all my doings may be fo ordered by thy governance, that I may do always that which is righteous in thy fight. This I beg, O merciful God, in the name of Jefus Chrift our Lord. AMEN.

4. For the evening.

O GOD, the fure defender of all who put their truft in thee, I most humbly beseech thee to keep me this night under the shadow of thy protection; let thy almighty power shield me against all dangers; defend me against all affaults of my spiritual or bodily enemies, and make me to dwell in a fafe and peaceful habitation. Pardon whatever thou hast feen amiss in me the past day, and enable me to ferve and obey thee better for all time to come. Grant this, O Father, according to thy gracious promises by Jefus Chrift our Lord. AMEN.

5. For bumility.

Most gracious and merciful God, who in thy great goodnefs didft give thy beloved Son to be our guide unto eternal life! grant that the example of his meeknefs and humility, his incomparable fweetnefs and condefection, may make the deepeft imprefions on my heart! Mortify in me all proud thoughts, thoughts, and every vain opinion of myfelf, that I may neither boaft of any thing which thou haft permitted me to poffers, nor be unmindful of the hand from whence it came. Make me to know my own infirmities, that I may never feek my own praife, nor delight in that which may be offered me by others. Help me to rejoice in difcharging my duty to thee, and in fhowing due honour to my fellowcreatures, and to do them all the good in my power, that at length I may receive the crown which thou haft prepared for thy faithful fervants, in thy kingdom of eternal glory, and haft promifed by Jefus Chrift, my bleffed Lord and Redeemer. AMEN.

6. For obedience to parents.

O ALMIGHTY LORD and heavenly Father, who delighteft in the obedience of thy children. I befeech thee give me a humble, meek and contrite fpirif. Infpire my heart with an utter abhorrence of the dreadful guilt of undutifulnefs and difobedience. Let no falfehood or evafion ever enter into my heart, or hinder me from confeffing the truth to thofe who have a right to require it of me. Make me patient under reproof, and diligent in performing my duty. Let my gratitude and fubmiffion to my parents be accepted as obedience to thee, my Father and my God! Grant this, I befeech thee, O Lord, for thy mercy's fake in Jefus Chrift our Lord: AMEN.

7. For fidelity in fervitude.

GREAT God, thou righteous judge of men! let thy fear be always before mine eyes, that I may discharge my duty with faithfulness and zeal. Let my conduct towards my fuperiors (a) express my gratitude for all the mercies which thou haft vouchfafed unto me. Thy all-piercing eye can fee my inmost thoughts, and minutest actions! Let my fidelity and refpect towards my fuperiors be apparent. in their (b) fight, that I may delight in promoting their profperity; and I befeech thee to give them. fuch a just fense of their eternal obligations to justice and piety, temperance, and all other virtues, that their conduct may not difturb the repose of my mind. but our endeavours be united in the advancement of thy glory and of the good of mankind. This L beg, O merciful Father, of thine infinite goodnefs. by Jefus Chrift our Lord. Amen.

8. For patience, particularly in fervitude.

Most merciful God, and tender Father, I befeech thee, in thine infinite goodnefs, to remove from me all pride and haughtinefs of fpirit, and teach me how to fupport myfelf under every circumftance of life; that with patience, refolution, and finglenefs of heart, I may overcome evil with good, and ever poffefs my foul in tranquillity. Grant me grace to imitate the humility of my bleffed Lord and Saviour, that I may obtain fuch a peace of mind, and reft of foul, as the world cannot give. Let my confeience be always void of offence towards thee, and my fellow-creatures; that amidft all the follies and iniquities which furround me, I may acquit myfelf with applaufe in thy fight, O God, and receive the great reward which thou haft promifed to thy faithful fervants, by Jefus Chrift. AMEN.

(a) Mafter or Miftrefs, or both.(b) His, her, or their.

9. For application to business, and refignation to providence.

ALMIGHTY Lord, who haft ordained by thy unchangeable decrees that' man shall eat his bread in fweat and labour ; give me, I befeech thee, an active and industrious disposition. Let my diligence and innocency go hand in hand and administer to their mutual fupport; that my life may pass in fafety, and my death be full of hope. Teach me, O God, an entire fubmiffion to thy will ! Give me fo true a relifh of my condition, that the glorious example of humility which Chrift hath fet before my eyes may appear as far beyond any earthly advantage, as the glories of eternity outfhine the transient fplendour of this world. Thus refigned, O Lord, let me labour with my hands, in ftedfaft hopes of future happinefs, through thy great goodnefs revealed by Jefus Chrift our Lord. AMEN.

10. For

10. For chaftity.

Most holy and eternal Father, I befeech thee, iet thy fpirit defcend upon thy fervant, that my body may be undefiled from all impurities. Let no unchafte words pollute the tongue which thou haft commanded to be an organ of thy praife. Scal up my fenfes from all vain objects, that they may be fortified against the affaults of temptation; and that, by watchfulness and mortification, posseffing my foul in true holiness, I may at length refign myfelf to death, in stedfast hope of being made partaker of a joyful refurrection, through thy great mercy in Jefus Christ my exalted Lord and Master. AMEN.

II: Far benefactors.

Most merciful Lord, thou fountain of all good to men and angels, I befreech thee extend thy favour and loving kindnefs to my friends and benefactors. Reward them for the good, which through thy providence they have conveyed to me. Guard them from all fadnefs and effliction, but fuch as may be inftrumental to thy glory, and their eternal comfort. Preferve their perfons from all violence : and let not the powers of darknefs prevail againft them. Guide them in thy paths, and make them the inftruments of thy mercies to mankind ; that amidft all the taunts and ingratitude of the world; they may fland as monuments of thy paternal tendernefs and care, and finally be received into thine ever-everlasting kingdom, through thy promifed mercies to us in our Lord and Saviour Jefus Christ! AMEN.

12. Against censoriousness.

O TENDER Father of mankind, correct in me, I befeech thee, whatever is malevolent or cenforious; reflrain my tongue from evil, and my lips that they fpeak no guile; that imitating the conduct of my bleffed Saviour by unfeigned love and true commiferation, I may mourn over the offences of others; and by my beft endeavours make them fenfible of the errors of their ways. If it be thy pleafure, let me fuffer injuries, but not do them. Teach me, O God, to enter into the receffes of my own heart; and take an impartial view of my own fins; that avoiding all fevere judgments of others, I may finally efcape condemnation at the judgment feat of Chrift, in whofe moft holy name I implore thy mercy, AMEN.

13. For grace to refist pride, and unquietnefs.

MOST righteous and just God, to whose all-piercing eye ungodlines and wrong are open as the day; grant, I befeech thee, that whatever injuries or provocations I may meet with in the world, I may difcern the folly and wickedness of pride and anger, and meekly commit my cause unto thee, trusting in thine infinite wisdom and goodness for relief, through Jefus. Chrift our Lord. AMEN.

14. For

14. For a bufband, or a wife.

MOST gracious Father, and eternal God, who haft confecrated the holy ftate of marriage; I befeech thee, let not the cares and inquietudes, the weakneffes and infirmities, which cleave to our imperfect nature, discompose my spirit. Give me under all the accidents and viciflitudes of life, a cheerful and obliging temper, a ftrict attention to my duty towards thee, with truth, fidelity and affection to my husband (or wife). Give me thy grace I befeech thee, that I may be a guide and good example to my family; that all discharging their respective duties in quietnefs, contentment, and humility, thy bleffings, O God, may reft upon them, and particularly on the perfon of my hufband (or wife) : and grant, O Father, that we may both, live in mutual love, to the end of a holy and happy. life, and finally be received into thy joys, which, thou halt promifed by Jefus Chrift our bleffed Lord. AMEN.

15. For pardon of fins in ficknefs.

the bar to

HEAR'me, O almighty and most merciful Father, and extend thy goodness to thy fervant. Sanctify, I befeech thee, all thy corrections to me, that the fense of my weakness, in my prefent condition, may add strength to my faith, and feriousness to my repentance. Give me grace to to take this visitation, that if my fickness shall end my prefent life, I may T 3 be be removed to those regions, where fickness, pain, and forrow shall be no more, even to dwell with thee in blifs eternal, through thy mercy in Jesus Christ our Lord. AMEN.

16. For recovery from fickness and for resignation.

Most righteous God, in whole hands are the appointments of life and death, grant that I may perceive thy justice and mercy, and look up to thee for firength to bear, and grace to profit by my ficknefs. Let me confider it as a fcourge for my fins, and a medicine to heal the difeafes of my foul. Grant, O Lord, it may answer these ends, that strufting in thy gracious promifies, I may behave myfelf fubmiffively, patiently, and devoutly; and if it be thy pleafure to reftore me to health, let me conftantly fend up my heart in praife and gratitude to thee, and lead the refidue of my days in thy fervice, and to thy glory. But if it is thy willthat I now thall die, O God, forgive my manifold tranfgreffions : and prepare my heart, that I may ftand accepted before thy throne. Receive me into thy favour, O Father eternal, according as thou haft promifed to those who obey thee, by Jefus Christ our Lord. AMEN.

17. For a good life and happy death.

O LORD and Father of my life, I behold my days paffing away like a fhadow; fhed thy influence on my heart, that I may improve the remainder of them, them, and recover the precious time which I haveloft! Infruct me, O God of wifdom, how to prepare myfelf for that hour, when I fhall appear before thy judgment feat! that being full of the hopes of a blifsful immortality, I may rather defire than dread my diffolution. Thy eternal decree is paft: and it is appointed to man once to die: O teach me to meet the king of terrors without difmay: teach me to receive him as a welcome meffenger, and whether early or late, let me joyfully obey thy fummons! This I beg, as the difciple of Jefus Chrift our Lord. AMEN.

18. A prayer for divine affiftance in every event of life, and particularly with a view to marriage.

A'LMIGHTY and everlassing Lord God, Thou that dwelless in light inacceffible, and art in excellence most transferndent! how shall I, one of the lowess of thy intelligent creatures, venture to supplicate thy mercy; or in what language shall I address thee? But thou art a God as of all power, fo of everlassing mercy, and not only feess at one view all the nations of men that dwell upon earth (and in thy fight all things pass, prefent, and to come, are ever prefent), but condescendess to direct the steps of those that fear thee ! " Not a sparrow falleth to the ground, without thee, our Father."

It is by thy Son's gofpel we are taught that our everlatting happinels or milery will depend upon our prefent prefent conduct; teach me, therefore, O heavenly Father, not fo much to feek the fatisfactions of this world, as to attain that holinefs of character, without which I muft lofe thy favour, and be wretched for ever. O fave me, I befeech thee, from fuch an excefs of woe! But as my future conduct will much depend upon the fituation in which I am placed, be gracioufly pleafed fo to order the events of thy providence, as that I may be led to determine upon a fingle or married life, as may beft conduce to my eternal welfare; and that I may confider the marriage fiate in all its real importance, not as a light and trivial thing, but as an event upon which the happinefs of myfelf, and of my hufband, may depend for ever.

Teach me fo to walk in thy fear, that I may dread the company of a profane, a drunken, or a diffioneft perfon, (a) knowing that by their example, I fhall be led away from keeping thy commandments: and fuffer me not to give my affection to any one who is not alfo thy fervant.

Thou knoweft that I am at this time fought in marriage, and that the perfon is very dear to me. If thou feeft fit to approve our union, fanctify unto us I befeech thee this affection, (b) that in purity, fimplicity,

(a) When the view to marriage is only general.
(b) When the affections are engaged to a particular perform.

fimplicity, and godly fincerity, we may have our converfation in this world, knowing that it is but for a time !

But, above all, fuffer not the allurements of an earthly attachment to draw off my mind from its chiefeft good; an attachment which must neceffarily foon ccafe, and be done away for ever. O fuffer me not to fet my heart upon any perfon or thing in this world, fo as hereafter to think any of thy difpenfations grievous, but grant that in all things I may now and for ever entirely refign myfelf, and all that belongs to me, into thy hands, knowing that I and my affairs are nothing, are lefs than a point in, the midft of thy works, further than as thou makeft me to fill one link in the chain which binds together thy intelligent creation. Grant this, O heavenly Father, in the way appointed by Jefus Chrift, our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

GENERAL

GENERAL DEVOTIONS.

(218)

HEAR me, O Lord of life ! ponder my meditations, and confider the longings of my foul to ferve and worfhip thee ! When I look back on thy wonders of old, and the mercies which thou haft fhown to all the children of men : when I contemplate the prefervation I have experienced in my own perfon, in ficknefs and danger, my heart is exalted with joy, and my fpirit refleth in the hope of the continuance of thy goodnefs to me, even for ever and ever.

Yet am I unworthy to ftand in thy fight, O God, for my tranfgreffions and infirmities are numberlefs! Give me thy aid to fue for thy pardon 1 Vouchfafe to grant me fuch a meafure of patience and humility, meeknefs and temperance, fortitude and benevolence, that my thoughts being fubdued by righteoufnefs, my words and actions may be acceptable in thy fight. Purify my imagination, and banifh the foolifhnefs of my thoughts, which fo often interrupts the repofe of my mind! I am imperfect in nature, and not worthy to look up to heaven ! Yet O God, thou knoweft whereof I am made : make me fo watchful and refolute, that I may never fall again from thee.

Thy judgments, O Lord, are right; and in faithfulnefs faithfulnefs doft thou caufe us to be troubled. The foul that is troubled, and the fpirit that is vexed, criefh unto thee! Hear me then, O God, my Father, and turn thee unto me according to the multitude of thy mercies. Let the remembrance of my paft mifdeeds be blatted out, and cleanfe me from my fecret faults : let not the fins, to which I am by temper and conflictution prone, prevail againft me.

O Father Almighty, grant me fuch a measure of thy grace, that I may daily learn how to repent; and fo apply myfelf to the difcharge of my duty, that when my feet shall ship, thou in thy goodness mayst uphold me.

Give me a contrite heart, O Lord, that I may worthily lament my fins: and make fuch confeffion of them, as thou fhalt pleafe to accept, in the way thou haft promifed by the gofpel of our Lord Jefus Chrift.

Let thy fpirit lead me forth, and direct my paths in righteoufnefs : that with zeal and truth, purity and finglenefs of heart, I may difcharge thy will on earth, fo far as my imperfect nature will admit, as it is done in heaven.

Grant that 1 may keep in conftant view the life and death of the bleffed Saviour of the world, that through faith in his promifes, I may obtain remiffion of my fins. Let me confecrate every hour of my life to follow his example; and let all the glories of this transfient fcene appear as darknefs and horror, in comparison comparison of the wisdom which springeth from hope in that immortal life which he hath promised !

Give me thy grace, O Lord, fo to improve my fleeting hours, that I may compafs all the pious and rational defigns at which my foul afpires. Let me act as a chofen inftrument of thy mercies to mankind: that in every condition, the happinefs of others may be the conftant fubject of my joy. Yet banifh from me all anxious defires, that I may poffefs my fpirit in freedom and refignation; and fuffer not the noife and buftle of the world, or the deluding blandifhments of fenfe, to captivate my heart; but whilft my body tends to its original duft, may the firength of my mind grow to maturity; and my foul be exalted in the contemplation of the happinefs of the juft, in the blifsful regions of immortality.

Cherifh and ftrengthen my hopes, that whatever thy wildom fhall ordain, concerning the time which thou fhalt permit me to live on earth, I may refolutely purfue that which is right in thy fight; and whilft I enter into the receffes of my own mind, and compaffionate the faults of others, let me pour out my foul unto thee, in whofe friendship there can be no difappointment.

Give me a true understanding of the honour, and love, which I owe to my king, my country, and mankind in general: but let no flattery nor distinction, nor any false bias, fully the purity of my love and, gratitude towards thee, or divert the current of my

my thoughts from the fountain of reason, and the fource of felicity !

Let the ends of the earth remember thee, O God, and all nations fall down before thee! Although the hoft of heaven pay homage to thee, O father omnipotent, reject not my humble praife!

Thou, thou art all! To thee, O God, I offer up my prayer, from the hour I rife from the death of fleep till my fenfes are locked again in darknefs. Let all my hopes and all my wiftes centre in thee, O Lord, and be directed to thy glory.

Fill my heart with fuch knowledge of thy wifdom, thy goodnefs, thy juffice, that I may delight in thy laws, and dwell under the fhadow of thy mercy! Let my remembrance of thee be fweeter than the praifes of an applauding world; and the riches of thy wifdom, beyond all the earth can afford!

Let the knowledge of thy facred word, transmitted down from age to age, guide and direct my fleps; that, reafon being enlightened by the gofpel of truth, I may fee and approve what is holy, juft, and pure; and love, and fear, and adore thy unchangeable perfections! O make thy will appear to me clearly, that difcerning thy laws I may inflexibly abide in thy flatutes!

Shed thy influence on my foul, O Lord Almighty, that I may poffers fuch fortitude as will always keep me in thy paths. Thou, O Ged, art truth; and U all all my refearches in which I depart from thee, are full of error and delufion.

Strengthen the powers of my mind, O God, that I may learn and practife all things which are agreeable to thee, till the approaching time arrives, when, by thy mercy, I may behold the brightness of thy incomprehensible wifdom and glory.

Teach me, O Lord, to meet my diffolution with a humble and contrite, but undaunted heart; and, O my Father and my God! let me die the death of the righteous, that when I shall appear at the tribunal of Christ, whom thou hast appointed to judge the world, I may hear his fentence in ecstaly of joy, and become a partaker in his glory.

O merciful, omnipotent Father! hear this my prayer! Hear me, I befeech thee, and bring me to thine everlafting joys, through Jefus Chrift our Lord. AMEN.

HYMNS.

HYMNS.

1.-Hymn for gratitude.

WHEN all thy mercies, O my God, My rifing foul furveys, Transported with the view, I'm lost In wonder, love, and praise.
O how shall words with equal warmth The gratitude declare,
That glows within my ravish'd heart ? But thou canss read it there.
Thy providence my life fustain'd, And all my wants redrefs'd,
When in the filent womb I lay, And hung upon the breast.

To all my weak complaints and cries Thy mercy lent an ear, Ere yet my feeble thoughts had learnt To form themfelves in prayer.

Unnumber'd comforts on my foul Thy tender care beftow'd, Before my infant heart conceiv'd From whence those comforts flow'd.

Through every period of my life Thy goodnefs I'll purfue; And, after death, in diftant worlds The glorious theme renew.

When nature fails, and day and night Divide thy works no more;My ever grateful heart, O Lord, Thy mercy fhall adore.

2.—For protection from wicked perfons.
To God I cried, with anguifh flung, Nor form'd a fruitlefs prayer;
O fave me from the lying tongue, And lips that would enfnare !

Safe fhall I go, and fafe return, While he my life defends, Whofe eyes my ev'ry ftep difcern, Whofe mercy never ends.

3 .- Against flattery.

To thee I call; O hafte thee near; My voice, great God, indulgent hear; With grateful odour to the fkies As incenfe let my pray'r arife. And let my hands, uplifted high, With full acceptance meet thine eye. Let virtue's friends, feverely kind, With welcome chaftifement my mind

Correct;

Correct; but give not thefe to fhed The balm of flattery o'er my head; Left fudden from thy wrath I feel The ftroke, that none fhall know to heal.

4 .- On the fortness and vanity of life.

HEAR, Lord, my pray'r, and let my cries Accepted to thy throne arife; O turn not thou thy face away, Nor longer my relief delay; But mark my forrow from on high. And pitying to my call reply. Faft as the mountain fmoke decays, On Time's light pinion flit my days : As fades the fladow of the fun With quick decline my moments run, Just verging to their close: my face, Its vernal bloom, and youthful grace, Extinguish'd, withers on the eye, As plants beneath a hoftile fky. But thou, bleft guard of Ifrael's fold, Shalt ages fee on ages roll'd, And, thron'd above, to endlefs days Extend thy honour, name, and praife.

5.—For repentance and trust in God. LORD! to my wants thy ear incline; Behold me, as with grief I pine; My hope confirm, and guard from ill A foul fubjected to thy will.

From

From rifing to declining day, To thee with fervent lip I pray; Propitious, to thy fervant's heart Thy cheering influence impart : To thee, to thee, I vent my care; I know thee, Lord, nor flow to fpare, Nor weak to vindicate from harm, The foul with pure devotion warm. My days with forrow clouded o'er, Thy wanted fuccours I implore. Long as I breathe the vital air, Thy love my loudeft praife fhall fhare, Whofe aid my foul with health has crown'd, And fnatch'd me from the pit profound.

6 .- A bymn. The Christian's contemplation.

In vain the dufky night retires,

And fullen fhadows fly: In vain the morn with purple light Adorns the eaftern fky.

In vain the gaudy rifing fun

The wide horizon gilds; Comes glitt'ring o'er the filver ftreams, And cheers the dewy fields.

In vain difpenfing vernal fweets, The morning breezes play; In vain the birds with cheerful fongs Salute the new-born day.

In

In vain; unlefs my Father's face Thefe gloomy clouds controul,
And diffipate the fullen fhades That prefs my drooping foul.
Oh ! vifit then thy fervant, Lord, With favour from on high;
Arife, my bright immortal fun, And all thefe fhades will die.
O when fhall I behold thy face,

(227)

All radiant and ferene, Without those envious dusky clouds That make a veil between?

When fhall that long-expected day Of facred vision be ?

When fhall my foul impatient make

A near approach to thee ?

7 .- Hymn on the excellency of the bible.

HERE are my choiceft treasures hid, Here my best comfort lies,

Here my defires are fatisfy'd,

And hence my hopes arife.

Lord, make me underftand thy law, Show what my faults have been, And from thy gofpel let me draw Pardon for all my fin.

Here do I learn how Chrift has dy'd To fave my foul from hell: Not all the books on earth befide Such heav'nly wonders tell. Then let me fearch thy feriptures more, And, with renew'd delight, By day read all thy wonders o'er, And meditate by night. 8. Hymn .- The wildom of God in his works. Songs of immortal praise belong To thee, almighty God ! To thee are due our heart, our tongue, To fpread thy name abroad. H. How great the works thy hand has wrought ! How glorious in our fight ! And, men in ev'ry age have fought Thy wonders with delight. HI. How most exact is nature's frame ! How wife th' eternal mind ! Thy counfels never change the fcheme That thy first thoughts defign'd. (229) V.

To fear thy pow'r, to truft thy grace, Is our divineft fkill; And he's the wifeft of our race That beft obeys thy will.

9. Hymn .- The wildom of God in his works.

I.

GREAT God, the heav'n's well-order'd frame Declares the glories of thy name ;

There thy rich works of wonder fhine; A thoufand ftarry beauties there, A thoufand radiant marks appear Of boundlefs pow'r and fkill divine.

II.

From night to day, from day to night, The dawning and the dying light

Lectures of heav'nly wildom read : With filent eloquence they raife Our thoughts to the creator's praife,

And neither found or language need.

III.

Yet their divine inftructions run Far as the journeys of the fun :

All nature joins to fhew thy praife. Thus God in ev'ry creature fhines: Fair is the book of nature's lines,

But fairer is the book of grace.

10. Hyann.

10. Hymn.-The equity of the divine dispensations.

I.

FATHER of men! who can complain Under thy mild and equal reign? Who does a weight of duty fhare More than his aids and pow'rs can bear?

п.

With diff'ring climes and diff'ring lands, With fruitful plains and barren fands, Thy hand hath form'd this earthly round, And fet each nation in its bound.

III.

With like variety, thy ray Here fheds a full, there fainter, day; While all are in their measure flow'd The way to happiness and God.

IV.

O the unbounded grace which brought To us the words by Jefus taught! So bleft, and with fuch hopes infpir'd, How much is giv'n! how much requir'd!

11. Hymn .- Divine providence.

THRO' all the various thifting fcene Of life's mittaken ill or good, Thy hand, O God, conducts unfeen The beautiful vicifiitude.

II. Thou

II:

Thou givest with a father's care, Howe'er unjustly we complain, To each their necessary share

Of joy and forrow, health and pain.

III.

All things on earth, and all in heav'n, On thine eternal will depend; And all for greater good were giv'n, Would man purfue th' appointed end.

IV.

Be this our care ; to all befide Indiff'rent let our wifhes be : Paffion be calm, and dumb be pride, And fix'd our fouls, O God, on thee.

12. Hymn.-The perfections and providence of God.

I.

HIGH in the heav'ns, eternal God, Thy goodnefs in full glory fhines; Thy truth fhall break thro' ev'ry cloud

Which veils and darkens thy defigns.

II.

For ever firm thy justice stands,

As mountains their foundations keep ; Wife are the wonders of thy hands,

Thy judgments are a mighty deep.

III. Thy

(232).

III.

Thy providence is kind and large;

Both man and beaft thy bounty fhare ; The whole creation is thy charge ; The good are thy peculiar care.

IV:

O God, how excellent thy grace, Whence all our hope and comfort fprings? The fons of Adam in diffrefs Fly to the fhadow of thy wings.
